Water flows at Rancho San Carlos

TEST WELLS at Rancho San Carlos continue to produce water during high-stress conditions.

Gray: 'There appears to be enough water'

By SUSAN BECK

MEMBERS OF the Rancho San Carlos land-management team are breathing a sigh of relief these days as several test wells pump a steady flow of water up from the depths of the almost 20,000-acre spread in Carmel Valley.

Water is the key issue concerning a proposed subdivision for the ranch, which includes 350 housing units, a 150-room lodge, possible golf course and community center.

"All of the wells have done very well under high-stress conditions," said Tom Gray, managing partner for Rancho San Carlos. "That's encouraging."

At the end of October, four wells some 500 to 600 feet deep, will have completed a 30 day, 24-hour pump test that determines the feasibility of maintaining a continuous supply of water to the ranch, Gray explained.

The test wells are dispersed in various locations throughout Rancho San Carlos, reflecting different geological formations, Gray added. This provides a fair representation of available water for future use.

Will Highway 1 widening survive without Caltrans?

■CTC chairman suggests it would be foolish to approve a project without the blessing of traffic professionals

By PAUL WOLF

WITH THE California Department of Transportation's continuing opposition to the Highway 1 widening plan, Hatton Canyon freeway opponents face a major obstacle blocking their preferred project.

Can the Highway 1 widening plan survive without Caltrans?

That is the question everyone is asking, after a key Caltrans official this week indicated the agency still supports the Hatton Canyon freeway and believes no "safe and cost-effective" alternative can be produced.

GREG ALBRIGHT OF CALTRANS

"I have not seen the (Caltrans) report, but I can't conceive of our approving a project that doesn't make sense," said Jereme Lipp, chairman of the five-member California Transportation Commission, the state's funding arm for proposed transportation improvements.

Speaking in a telephone interview with The Carmel Pine Cone, Lipp said such action would be the "height of foolishness."

The CTC will decide next month what will be done with $41 million earmarked for the county.

Meanwhile, the 17-member Transportation Agency for Monterey County (TAMC), which meets Wednesday, Oct. 27, will hear from Caltrans.

Project St. Bernard begins to take shape

By PAUL WOLF

ONE SOCIAL worker described a case of a local resident living in a garage with just a hot plate. "I don't know how the landlord tolerates it," she said.

A specialist in legal services for seniors spoke of "financial abuse" suffered by one senior at the hands of a pilfering nephew.

And then there was the story of the fairly well-to-do widow, age 90, whose judgement was fractured: She would barely eat because she didn't want to break into her principal.

Do these tales lend themselves to obvious solutions? To what extent might a local group of concerned volunteers watch over the welfare of Carmel's "at-risk" seniors?

While these questions linger, one thing is clear: Mayor Ken White's plan to set up a kind of Neighborhood Watch for Carmel seniors got a boost of encouragement as a roomful of social service professionals expressed enthusiasm for his concept.

The mayor was joined by 16 social service professionals and other interested people at a 90-minute meeting, Friday, Oct. 15, held at Carmel City Hall.

By all appearances, the program would be innovative. Committee members could think of no other programs like it operating in other communities.

Volunteer network

As it is now envisioned, the program would be a network of volunteers coordinated and trained by social service professions. At the heart of the program would be block or neighborhood "captains," who would keep track of certain individuals.

The social service professionals who spoke Friday suggested strongly that ongoing "case management" is what is lacking most in available community services to the elderly.

"There is only so far our services can go," admitted Vivica Lohr, executive director of the Pacific Grove-based Meals on Wheels. "Often, there is no follow-up. What we would like to get is some volunteer case management. I see this as an important and viable service."

White has set himself up with three others in the form of a commitee. The mayor has found a name for his mission: Project St. Bernard, a reference to the

Sentencing delayed for juveniles in CHS arson case

THE SENTENCING of three juveniles in connection with a June 13 arson blaze at Carmel High School has been postponed.

The sentencing was anticipated for 1:30 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 20, before Superior Court Judge John Anton. There was no new date for the sentencing as of Pine Cone press time on the same afternoon.

The three former CHS students were arrested June 20 following a two-week crime spree that reportedly included auto theft, vandal-

'Almost every group in town is represented'

Committee clicks to make birthday bash a reality

By SCOTT BREARTON

THE CITY of Carmel will soon be celebrating its 77th birthday party in grand style, thanks to the efforts of "Carmel Celebrates Community," a committee formed last year by Mayor Ken White.

"People can come together, forget their differences and have a good old-fashioned time," White said. "They argue so much about zoning laws and ordinances in this town."

White said the idea for the committee came to him shortly after he was elected to office in April 1992. Under the leadership of former mayor Jean Grace, he said the city's 75th birthday party – the "Diamond Jubilee" – was a huge success.

"I kept hearing people saying what a wonderful party it was," White recalled. "We need to continue to do that. It brings people together. It's a hometown-type gathering with local people. Everybody loves Carmel."

Noel Van Bibber agreed. The Northeast Neighbors Association president and committee member said the 75th birthday party provided the impetus to make it an annual event.

MAGGIE HARDY, committee chairperson

"We decided then we ought to do it every year," Van Bibber said. "It brings everybody together, old and young, all the different groups together, with no political basis. Each one of them becomes just a good, old-time Carmel resident.

"It's a great way to taper off the year in good spirit."

But, according to White, the city was beginning to experience a budget shortfall at the time with no extra money in its coffers to sponsor the event.

So, White asked a group of people to come together for the city's 76th birthday party, many of whom had worked to make the Diamond Jubilee a success. The only difference was that, this time, the group would have to raise the money on its own with no help from the city.

How was the money raised?

In an unusual show of unity from local service clubs and neighborhood organizations, $1,000 was raised to throw the party.

"We paid back the money, plus we had about $350 left over," White said. "Using that profit, we're moving into this year with no help from anybody. We're funding this 77th birthday party with no city funds."

White said the committee is counting on high ticket sales to pay for this year's Halloween Parade and Birthday Barbecue on Sunday, Oct. 31. Proceeds will benefit the Mayor's Youth Fund.

"We'd like to see it happen every year," White noted. "It's a community event."

The mayor was quick to credit members of the broad-based Carmel Celebrates Community Committee, who he said have worked tirelessly to make the event a success.

"We have representatives working really hard on this committee from all the different groups in town," White said. "Almost every group in town is represented here, including city staff."

Members of the committee include city employees, representatives from the Carmel Business Association, local residents' groups, the Red Cross, the Abalone Club and Friends of Sunset Foundation.

Sur Sur Ranch funds OK'd

A CONGRESSIONAL committee has approved appropriation of $2 million to buy 994 acres of the Sur Sur Ranch for the federal parks system, Congressman Sam Farr announced this week.

"I care deeply about the preservation of this pristine land," Farr said, "and am very pleased that the House-Senate Conference Committee responded to my request for funding."

Sur Sur Ranch is on the ocean-facing slopes of the Santa Lucia Mountains and extends from mountain ridges to the surf. It includes wide meadows, dense redwood forests and rugged cliffs.

Farr won inclusion of the money in the new Interior Department budget, then lobbied for restoration after the U.S. Senate cut the $2 million. Final approval could come later this week, he said.

Artist's health improving

LONGTIME PENINSULA artist Sam Colburn, 84, was at home in Pacific Grove "and showing improvement" on Wednesday following a brief stay in Carmel Convalescent Hospital, according to his wife.

Artist Grace Meredith-Colburn said: "Sam is very strong and lucid. With proper care, he will make a good recovery."

Colburn went into Carmel Convalescent after medical problems flared up about two weeks ago.

"He might go back there for a few days until he is stronger," his wife said Wednesday. "I'm not sure right now. We're waiting for a call from his doctor."

Road work has begun

THE MONTEREY County Public Works Department has begun restoration work on an existing retaining wall on Garrapatos Road, one tenth of a mile from Palo Colorado Road off Highway 1.

Garrapatos Road will be closed from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday until Oct. 29. The remainder of the reconstruction work is expected to continue until Nov. 19.

During the closure, emergency traffic will be detoured through private property to Highway 1 between noon and 12:30 p.m., Monday through Thursday.

Burglars hit local business

BURGLARS HIT Pilgrim's Way Books (on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth) and escaped with $962 in jewelry, Carmel Police Department reported this week.

"Yes, jewelry," said Detective Sgt. Warren (Pete) Poitras. "It's an eclectic shop. Here's another case of thieves victimizing a place that didn't have an alarm system."

Entry was gained through a broken window some time between 10 p.m. Friday, Oct. 15, and 10 a.m. the next day, Poitras said. The matter was under investigation.

CHS student of the month

NATASHA BELANGER has been selected as student of the month by the Carmel High School English Department.

"I didn't think I was going to do that well," Belanger said. "I was pretty surprised when they told me."

The 16-year-old junior was chosen for her excellent English skills. Characterizing herself as a "strong essay writer," Belanger said she has written numerous short stories, papers on early American literature and a lengthy research paper on Arthur Miller's The Crucible.

Belanger has maintained a 4.0 grade point average since her freshman year at Carmel High.

Additionally, Belanger plays for the CHS varsity tennis and field hockey teams and is a junior volunteer at Community Hospital.

Belanger's goals include studying medicine at Duke University.

On environment: Candidates are both 'green,' disagree on specifics

■Patton believes in state-directed planning, but McPherson worries the Democrat would follow no-growth, one-issue agenda.

By PAUL WOLF

IN THE context of the beautiful 27th State Assembly District, it is a label neither wishes to do without — that of "environmentalist."

One candidate, Republican Bruce McPherson, hopes to convince the public he is one; the other, Democrat Gary Patton, hopes to show a diversity of commitments beyond environmental preservation.

MCPHERSON

At the same time, neither wishes to sound as though he is losing sight of the economy during a lingering recession.

Of the two, Patton is the recognized environmentalist, with a long record of activism during his 19 years as Santa Cruz County supervisor. He contends his opponent would be liable to sell out good stewardship in exchange for near-term profit.

Then there is McPherson — a retired newspaper reporter and editor — who argues Patton would be overrestrictive and inflexible, a one-issue legislator neglecting the needs of business.

"His record," McPherson said, "has shown the marks of his success in stopping things, not starting them."

PATTON

Convincing the public

It is not surprising that neither one likes the other speaking in his behalf, but it is often instructive to hear the charges and defenses. Often, the campaign becomes a public relations battle.

"No matter who is elected to the 27th District, we can rest assured the people will have an environmentalist on their side," said McPherson. "But the key word here is balance —between the needs of the beautiful environment, and those of the people who are also part of our environment.

McPherson added, "I do believe that jobs and the environment can go together. I believe that the conversion of Fort Ord will show that."

In fact, Patton, too, also is banking on such a win-win outcome with the reuse of the former Army property. He bristles at the notion he is a single-issue candidate, offering specific ideas for accommodating growth in the private sector while protecting the environment.

But not all issues are as easy as the reuse question. There is reason to believe Patton would be more likely to draw definitive lines.

Some "discipline" must be imposed on development — at least on the kind of speedy growth that has occurred over the past two decades, Patton said. The state needs to direct land use planning more aggressively to ensure agricultural lands, habitat and open

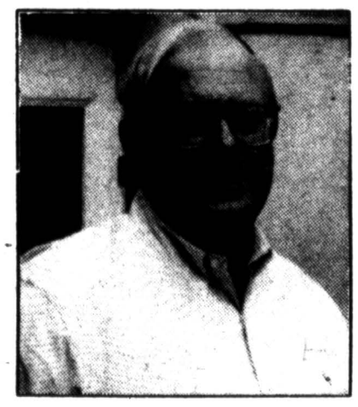
CUSD candidates define their views on health care, drug policy at public forum

By SCOTT BREARTON

RAY BURCH, Jim Kistenmacher and Annette Yee Steck have at least one thing in common – all three are campaigning for a two-year seat on the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education.

But when it came to discussing key issues in the school board race, differences began to emerge.

The candidates, who began by introducing themselves to a sizeable crowd, defined their views on varied topics during a public forum held Oct. 13 at Carmel Middle School.



JIM KISTENMACHER

Kistenmacher, who has two children enrolled at Carmel High School, highlighted his involvement in district committees and parent clubs. The local businessman has been a member of the district's Health Advisory Committee for the last three years, is chairman of the School Facilities Task Force and president of the CHS Athletic Boosters.

Additionally, Kistenmacher, 50, is a founding committee member of Community Against Substance Abuse (CASA), and has been involved in Friends of Carmel Unified Schools' SCRIP fund-raising campaign.

"I think my experience illustrates a commitment to the young people of this district," said Kistenmacher, "and has given me a window to view, up close, what is happening in our district."

If elected to the board, Kistenmacher said he would:

- Work to continue the ongoing feasibility study regarding the relocation of River Elementary School.
- Support "a strong, co-curricular drug policy."
- Seek an alternative to the district's current health care program.
- Address the "deferred maintenance problem."
- Develop "a better measure of fiscal accountability.

'Difficult decisions'

"Some very difficult decisions will have to be made in the next few years," Kistenmacher concluded. "These decisions will have a major impact on our district. I'm prepared to make them."

Yee Steck, 31, has a bachelor's degree in economics from UCLA. An investment banker specializing in public finance, she serves as an advisor and underwriter to over 90 school districts in Los Angeles County. She said her position involves reviewing district budgets to identify problems before they turn into crises.

"As a board member, I hope I can contribute the experience I have in working with school districts to our community," said Yee Steck. "The reason why I'm running is that I care about education and I think it's one of the most important things we can do to make a difference."

Yee Steck also took advantage of the opportunity to note her recent endorsement by the Association of Carmel Teachers.

Burch, a 42-year-old businessman, has lived in the Carmel area for the past two years. He and his wife have raised two children, a nephew and five foster children.

With 10 years of experience raising foster children who came to him with a history of substance abuse and

Noted East Coast attorney takes McFarland case

■ Former Carmel man remains in Monaco jail

By JOHN DETRO

FORMER LOCAL property developer Craig McFarland, still in a Monaco jail and charged with a $12 million scam against banks, is represented by a top gun of international criminal law.

That lawyer: Michael Abbell of Washington, D.C.

Abbell's presence in the case was made known this week by William P. Keane, assistant U.S. attorney, who bears responsibility for the extradition and prosecution of McFarland.

At the same time, Keane said extradition papers have been presented to authorities in Monaco and he anticipates "no problems with this phase."

The FBI announced McFarland was arrested in Monaco on Aug. 31 after a lengthy international search. He had disappeared from family and creditors in the springtime of 1992, agents said.

An indictment filed by Keane's office alleged last month that McFarland cheated five banks out of $12 million — "$3 million secured and $9 million in unsecured lines of credit," Keane said — by giving them false information about his financial status.

Offshore accounts

The FBI said nearly $2 million was funneled into accounts at offshore banks in Bermuda, the Channel Islands (near Great Britain) and Switzerland. Keane said this week, during a telephone interview from his San Jose headquarters, that "we are trying to recover a significant amount which McFarland stashed offshore."

Another telephone conversation led to Abbell's confirmation that he is representing McFarland. He described himself as "an attorney who practices criminal law internationally."

When he left the U.S. Justice Department nine years ago, Abbell said, he was head of the criminal division in the Office of International Affairs.

While he would not comment on the McFarland case "at this time," Abbell said he is author of a four-volume treatise on "international prisoner transfers," international laws of evidence "and related matters."

Asked if he is considered the authority on these subjects, he said with an easy chuckle: "Well, I'm one of the principal experts."

Abbell said he was retained by McFarland's parents "in Craig's name." The parents are the Arthur McFarlands of Carmel. Mrs. McFarland, 80, and her husband, 87, this week withheld comment on the case.

"We're trying to stay far away from it," Mrs. McFarland said. "Craig was constantly doing things for other people. Newspapers haven't talked about all the good he did."

Meanwhile, Keane commented: "It's fair to say that I don't think he will fight extradition. Craig McFarland could be on his way back within the next month."

Keane said he prepared the extradition papers, which went to Monaco via the U.S. State Department. He said McFarland still was in jail there, having first done "two weeks (worth of time behind bars) for presenting a false passport at the time of his arrest. Even if he decided to fight (extradition), there really are no issues to grab onto."

Speaking realistically, Keane said, the case could go to trial "in March or April" of next year.

"He could ask for a trial or come in and negotiate a plea," Keane said. "He's not really in a position to cut any deals. But we're always open to a settlement."

Short-term rental complaint rekindles old debate

By PAUL WOLF

AS THE City of Carmel continues to fight short-term home rentals in the village, the surrounding debate remains emblematic of the clash between certain residential and business interests.

"You lose the sense of community values when you don't even know who your neighbor is," argued Beth Wright, president of the Carmel Residents Association.

"These (short-term rentals) have been on every street and probably every block in Carmel. They have great impacts on the neighborhood."

Carmel has filed its third complaint this year against an allegedly violating property management company. This time the target is Del Monte Realty Co., along with Realtors Steven Van Buskirk and Rita Lewis.

The complaint, signed by Carmel City Attorney Don Freeman, cites violations to the Carmel law forbidding residential rentals for fewer than 30 days. "The Glass House" on Scenic Road near 13th Ave. was rented for a period of two weeks for $3,000.

The city is continuing its crackdown backed by a zoning ordinance that went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court. By refusing to hear the case, the high court upheld the law.

Despite the great course the legislation took, the local debate persists.

The CRA president was underscoring the justification for the law that seeks to keep quasi-motel uses out of the residential zones.

But while supporters of the code have the upper hand for the moment, some grumbling can be heard — not just in Carmel, but in Monterey and Pacific Grove, where similar laws are establishing a foothold.

"I don't know that there has been any public outcry (about short-term) rentals," said Toni Jepson, president of the Carmel Residents Association. "Our research shows there have been very few disturbances associated with them."

Whether short-staying guests in Carmel cause more headaches than anyone else is a subjective business.

"I have no way of tracking the situation," said Carmel Police Captain Don Fuselier. "If there is a disturbance in a neighborhood — a loud party or a case of Joe hitting Mary — there is no way for us to know how long they are staying there."

Opponents of short-term rentals say the integrity of the R-1 (single-family residential) district is eroded, "and you are pretty much setting up a business in the R-1," as Councilman Bob Fischer put it.

Commenting on "The Glass House," Fischer said, "$3,000 for two weeks — you're telling me that is not a business?"

The supporters of short-term rentals are not advocating unregulated arrangements. The CBA's Jepson believes one-week rentals would be a reasonable compromise. Residents would be protected for weekend rentals, yet the carpet would not be taken out from under a significant means of attracting people to Carmel.

Jepson also believes the city could consider charging room tax on the shorter-term rentals.

"Who has a month to take a vacation?" Pacific Grove Mayor Jeanne Byrne asked rhetorically. "Some people just like to stay at homes, instead of motels, so they can be comfortable."

Unfortunately for Byrne, she may be outnumbered on the seven-member PG City Council, which is scheduled to revisit its own law-in-progress in the second half of November. It is expected to approve a ban, like Carmel's, on rentals of less than 30 days.

Byrne's council colleague, Terrence Zito, is leaning on the side of requiring a 30-day minimum, as the PG draft ordinance proposes. One of his concerns is that, with short-term rental bans in both Monterey and Carmel, "there will be nothing left but our lovely Pacific Grove."

The Carmel-based San Carlos Agency, which is now in litigation with the city, has been fighting the rental ban since 1981, according to Bruce Britton, owner of that management company. "We have tried and tried to talk to the city, but we haven't gotten anywhere," he said.

A key question that appears difficult to answer is just how many of these near-term rental homes are operating in Carmel.

With Freeman on vacation at Pine Cone press time, and with no certain answers from the planning department, only wildly differing numbers remain. The estimates offered by various sources range from about 100 to several hundred such rental properties.

Project St. Bernard beginning to show its bark rescuing canines.

Other committee members present were Becky Hanna and Marjorie Montelius, both retired social workers. Shery Farr also serves on the Committee.

The committee, having received comment in Friday's informal setting, will now retreat and formulate a proposed program.

That program will be brought back to many of the same social service professionals, who get the chance to critique the plan. White told The Carmel Pine Cone he hopes the timetable for a concrete proposal will be more a matter of weeks than months.

Planting the seed

The seed of the idea, White said, was planted during the 1992 mayoral campaign, when candidate White was canvassing Carmel neighborhoods and encountering many examples of deplorable living conditions.

"I discovered there are a number of people who are not plugged into community agencies and may need help," he said. "There are holes in the services people receive, and I think we can find solutions."

With more than a half dozen agencies represented, a clear consensus emerged at the meeting: Despite the impressive array of social services available to seniors in Carmel and throughout the Monterey Peninsula, there are many people who fall through the cracks, refuse help or do not know what options they have.

"I hate to use the word stubborn, but that's what many of them (seniors) are," said Lee Chamberlain of Alliance on Aging. "They won't ask for help until it's an emergency."

There is a tendency among older people, a number of speakers related, to associate receiving help with a loss of independence. If so, this truth will not make Project St. Bernard a simple undertaking.

"These people have the right to live they way the do, and you are not going to see a solution to all of these problems," said Kerry Beren, a nurse who works as a discharge planner with Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.

"We need to respect the elderly for what they do. Many of them live on the edge. They survive day-to-day, seeing each day is a miracle, a conquest."

Moreover, the lifestyles that many at-risk seniors choose for themselves lead to legal questions — for starters, what constitutes "competence" in the management of one's own person and assets?

Recession's impact

The strain of the recession has been especially tough on social service programming. Wayne Lavengood, coordinator for geriatric services at CHOMP, said loss of county funding has meant a serious cutback in home visits to seniors. "We are backed up for weeks," he said.

Much of what needs to be developed, and what can be provided by Project St. Bernard, according to those at the meeting, is a tighter link between the service agencies that already exist. Key to this, they say, is not just supplying public information and education, but developing "non-judgemental trust" among would-be clients, as one speaker put it.

In all, those concerned seemed to be embarking on a tricky kind of outreach. The cases discussed Friday are filled with ironies. Consider the following:

- Those who most need help don't seek it; and when help is offered it is frequently refused.
- Neighbors are often better than friends and relatives at reporting poor living conditions.
- Victims, quite often, won't report instances of "elder abuse" by caretakers because they would rather be abused than deserted.
- The police department is one of the best clearinghouses of information, but "it's usually too late" by the time the emergency calls come in, according to Police Capt. Don Fuselier.
- The at-risk are in the greatest need of following doctor's orders, but often the most derelict about following instructions.

Expressing satisfaction

In August, the committee met with representatives from Carmel churches. After Friday's meeting, White expressed great satisfaction at the comments that the committee recorded.

"This has been a stunning morning," he said. "I believe Carmel is starting to recognize its seniors, who are the majority of its citizens."

As envisioned, White said, the program would not require city funding, although the mayor himself may have a key role in coordinating the network.

Consensus was reached that the program should manage to be both informational — to steer seniors to where they need to go — and personal — to give them encouragement and motivation in the face of the challenge to improve their circumstances.

Many speakers, the mayor included, said volunteers should span the generations. The problem — whether in Carmel or anywhere — has its roots in a society that forsakes its elderly, some argued.

White suggested volunteer work with Project St. Bernard could satisfy the community-service requirement that is part of the curricula at many area high schools, including Carmel High.

Water flows at RSC, but neighbor airs golf course concerns

The Rancho San Carlos draft environmental impact report prepared for the Monterey County Planning and Building Inspection Department in April 1992, Gray noted, indicated there probably was a substantial supply of water on the ranch to support the proposed subdivision project.

"The report said there 'should be enough' water," recalled Gray. "And, yes. There appears to be enough water," he said, adding he was quite pleased about the findings.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors set specific criteria for Rancho San Carlos to prove water could be sustained to support the subdivision with a safe, long-term yield, said Gray.

In addition, he said, the county requires a determination of whether or not using any water on the ranch will have an adverse impact on the Carmel River, which at present supplies 85 percent of Monterey Peninsula's Cal-Am customers.

"It's this last part of our requirements that we are engaged in right now," said Gray, who expects the subdivision proposal to be submitted to the county by the first of this year.

Nagging questions

However elated the Rancho San Carlos land management team may be over the latest revelations about water on the ranch, there continue to be some nagging questions presented by neighboring residents.

One such neighbor, Bruce Dormody, is still, after two and one half years since the Rancho San Carlos team came on the scene, concerned about the possibility of putting a golf course on the ranch, especially about the traffic and water implications it may have.

Dormody manages San Clemente Rancho, which his family purchased 33 years ago. The 2,054-acre property is reached by driving along Carmel Valley Road onto Robinson Canyon Road which becomes Dormody Road. Dormody Road is an easement through Rancho San Carlos.

There are 100 small cabins on a 150-acre section of San Clemente Rancho, which may be used no more than 45 consecutive days throughout the year.

The drive to San Clemente Rancho takes about 30 minutes through wide open terrain with black-tailed deer leisurely wandering near the road's edge. The trip is undisturbed by traffic.

According to Dormody, the beautiful, quiet drive to his family's property is threatened by the prospect of putting a golf course on the San Clemente Flats, which abuts both sides of Dormody Road.

"San Clemente Flats is their first choice for a golf course," Dormordy remarked. "They have placed a stake on a dirt road near the Flats that reads Golf Course Road."

There are four side roads off Robinson Canyon Road and five additional side roads off of Dormody Road, all coming from Rancho San Carlos, he noted.

"The Greater Monterey Peninsula Area Plan states that Robinson Canyon Road should be utilized for emergency access and agricultural ranch operations on Rancho San Carlos," said Dormody. "Any project should minimize the use of Robinson Canyon for traffic."

Dormody is concerned the access roads will encourage residents at the east end of Rancho San Carlos to use Robinson Canyon Road. And, more specifically, he said, if there ever is a golf course in the area, traffic will increase to thousands of trips each day.

"That would be devastating to Robinson Canyon Road," he remarked.

Other concerns

Dormody's other concern regarding a future golf course is water. He said the San Clemente Creek drains into the San Clemente Dam, which eventually becomes part of the Carmel River.

Effect on watershed?

Nitrates make grass green, Dormody noted. In a heavy rain, all of the chemicals, pesticides and nitrates on a golf course will wash directly into San Clemente Creek, which, he added, is a major watershed for the Monterey Peninsula.

"In a creek, nitrates produce algae," said Dormody. "Algae keeps rainbow trout and other fish from surviving."

And despite the fact that Rancho San Carlos is a vast property stretching for miles, Dormody wonders about the continuous drilling of wells in the area.

"With enough batteries of wells," he pointed out, "it is possible to siphon off the water in the San Clemente Creek. Who would have believed that someday you could point to the Carmel River and realize that it has been depleted, even in a drought?"

Gray said it is probable that a plan for a golf course will be presented to the county some time in the future. But, he declared, "It will not be part of our initial application."

City planning department to hire consultant

Preserved, not admired: Paving solution to Mission artifacts

By PAUL WOLF

WHAT MIGHT be the advice if there were discovered a bed of treasures lying underneath the dirt at the Carmel Mission?

It could be, "Pave it over."

Clearly visible at the southeast side of town is the stately Mission building, enjoyed daily by locals and visitors. But whatever Indian artifacts may be lodged in their subterranean home are perhaps better off never seeing the light of day.

Or so said Gary Brescnini, a Salinas-based archaeologist whose specialty is Indian prehistory, in a telephone interview with The Carmel Pine Cone.

Paving the way

The Carmel Planning Commission, meeting Oct. 13, directed the planning department to hire a consultant to do an archaeological survey of the Mission parking lot — which had been paved in September 1992 without the benefit of a permit.

This year, however, the Diocese of Monterey had the paving, carried out by Granite Construction, legitimized with the appropriate use permit. But now the issue of potential archaeological artifacts underground is surfacing.

"What will happen," posed Planning Commissioner Lindsay Hanna, "if a study reveals there is important archaeological remains underneath the parking lot? That is a very big question."

"Every square foot of that property," Hanna speculated, "has got to show artifacts and bones — because it was such an active place in the late 18th century and early 19th century."

An inventory will be the first step of the study. Tearing out the new pavement may, in fact, not be necessary, since there are breaks in the pavement, spaces for the landscaping.

Finally, the consultant or consulting team, according to Breschini, would make recommendations about how to proceed.

'Enjoyed to death'

"Artifacts have been enjoyed and sometimes enjoyed to death," Breschini said. "So paving or 'capping the site' is standard practice and can be found throughout state (archaeological preservation) [redacted]."

Breschini cited other areas, like a soon-to-be-paved location at the Moss Landing Marine Laboratory, where there is a record of what remains underground, but the artifacts stay invisible.

On Oct. 13, it was Commissioner Melanie Billig who requested the full commission look again at the property and its recent events. A meeting has been set for Nov. 17 when the commission to discuss the property's archaeological resources.

On Oct. 27, the commission will discuss the overall "policies and procedures" for development on properties located in Carmel's "Zone of Archaeological Significance."

Breschini doesn't believe there are any "prehistoric sites" at the location in question. Yet he wouldn't rule out the possibility of some significant pieces resting beneath the surface, perhaps telling tales about "life at the Mission."

Whatever the study is about to yield, the community may have to consider it enough to enrich the body of knowledge, but leave the treasures securely sealed in their longtime underground vault — preserved but not admired.

New animal pen for Bay School in the works

PARENTS AND community members are pulling together to build a new "predator-proof" cage in the wake of an attack by a bobcat which broke into the animal pen at Bay School Sept. 27, killing 13 birds that children there had been raising.

Demolition of the old animal pen took place last weekend at the parent cooperative preschool, located on Highway 1 near Monastery Beach.

Just days after the attack, Bay School administrators and parents began efforts to replace and rebuild the animal pen, according to Bay School Director Kathy Miller.

SPCA Operations Director Lisa Hoeffler will be contributing her expertise to ensure the new pen is secure.

Bay School parents David Kettle, a contractor, and Roberta Parisatti, an architect, will be working together to design and build the new pen, according to Miller.

"The animals have always been an important part of the magical learning experience at Bay School," said Miller, who noted the school has already received numerous pledges from those wanting to help replace the animals that were lost.

Miller said friends and alumni of Bay School who wish to join in the effort are welcome to send donations to: Bay School Animal Fund, Route 1, Box 48, Carmel, CA 93923.

Additional information can be obtained by calling Lore Riley at Bay School, 624-4397.

'Opportunity to set aside differences'

just been amazed at the amount of enthusiasm they have."

White said he hopes the committee's work will continue long after his term as mayor expires.

"The greatest value that Carmel Celebrates Community has is the opportunity to come together in true community spirit," said Hardy, committee chairman. "It's an opportunity to set aside the differences between the different political groups and join forces in a positive way to celebrate the true spirit of Carmel."

Jepson, executive director of the Carmel Business Association, put it a little differently...

"Just because we don't always agree philosophically doesn't mean we can't sit down and break bread," she said. "As a matter of fact, many of us who disagree on things are good friends."

And the committee, which usually meets about once a month, does more than just organize the city's annual birthday party.

Last year, White said he went to the committee and reported the funding had dried up for the free summer concerts offered on Fridays at Devendorf Park, and the free Sunday concerts at Forest Theater.

"They took the job on," White said, noting the money was raised through mayor's dinners and other fund raisers.

"We hope we'll be able to continue that next year," White said. "Hopefully, this group will takes charge of trying to build up the funds to pay for those free concerts next summer."

Hardy said the committee is counting on a big turnout for this year's Halloween Parade and Birthday Barbecue.

"A positive response to this event by residents of the community," Hardy said, "will reinforce the fact that Carmel can set aside its differences and share this commonality."

Local officials wonder if Caltrans will cooperate

"Without Caltrans, we're in trouble," admitted 5th District Monterey County Supervisor Sam Karas, a freeway opponent.

Second District Monterey County Supervisor Barbara Shipnuck, who chairs TAMC, said she agrees with Lipp's perception that Caltrans' support is essential.

"I would have difficulty voting for the widening," said Shipnuck, who has been supportive of the alternative at recent meetings. "We would have no choice but to pursue the Hatton Canyon freeway."

Caltrans wants the freeway and may be taking advantage of the fact that Hatton Canyon remains the "fallback" on the CTC's project list.

"I don't even know what I can say, but this is very difficult," said Carmel City Councilwoman Barbara Brooks, the city's TAMC representative and a long-time freeway opponent.

She added, "Caltrans is not supposed to be a policy-making body. That's for appointed and elected people. Staff (Caltrans) is supposed to make recommendations.

In what was arguably unprecedented action, The CTC denied the recommendations of the technical experts with Caltrans at a meeting in Sacramento Sept. 8.

On Sept. 8, the CTC rejected the freeway as the top project and directed Caltrans to cooperate with TAMC to help find a safe and cost-effective widening plan. The plan that had been presented was deemed unsatisfactory at that CTC meeting last month.

"We believe that a safe widening project would not be cost-effective in the long run, because we would be back to the service levels we are at now by the year 2000," said Caltrans engineer Gregg Albright.

One long-time opponent of the Hatton Canyon freeway, Carmel's Skip Lloyd, said a phrase like "cost-effective" is an "elastic term."

Argument, not fact

"This is an argument they are presenting, not a mathematical calculation," said Lloyd, a Monterey attorney who is leading the legal challenge against the freeway's environmental documentation.

A key question now among freeway opponents is, Will Caltrans present an unmovable object in the way of the widening project?

Karas said despite his concerns about Caltrans' anticipated opposition, he remains hopeful about a brand-new widening scheme, called "4/U," now under discussion.

"I'm disappointed with Caltrans; they've been so negative throughout this process. But I am hopeful that once the public sees this new plan, we will get their support."

For the moment, however, it is not the public's support that is needed by supporters of widening, but that of the traffic professionals.

Locals will get chance to support wide effort in search for Polly

By JOHN DETRO

THE SEARCH for Polly Klaas, the 12-year-old who was abducted from her Petaluma home on Oct. 1 by a man wielding a knife, is being reported on the front pages of significant newspapers in London and Japan.

The story also has a strong local focus since the child's grandparents live in Carmel (Joe and Betty Jane Klaas) and Pebble Beach (Eugene and Joan Reed). Polly's aunt, Elizabeth Klaas, is an executive at a Carmel art gallery.

Now, Becky Hunter of Pebble Beach, volunteer distributor of kidnap flyers throughout the region, says Carmel and Pebble Beach residents will be asked to get more involved in the search effort.

They admitted their involvement in the fire during a juvenile hearing in Superior Court on Sept. 8.

Thanks to L'Oreal

WE HEARD some exciting news this week. The L'Oreal cosmetics company has long been committed to its policy of using animals to test their products while many other compassionate companies have seen the light and stopped the cruelty. I'm happy to report that L'Oreal announced this week they will no longer use research animals. And best of all, the testing ban is throughout the company, worldwide. So thanks L'Oreal — and it's about time!

Kitty-Cats need homes

We're still searching for loving homes for Billy the Kid and Sally, our sweet feline friends. I've mentioned these two angels before but briefly, Billy is one-year old, neutered, a fabulous "Morris"-colored indoor kitty who loves to be loved. Sally is one and one-half years, spayed, an adorable indoor tabby. Please call 647-2350 about Billy and Sally.

Also — we've just heard about three female tortie kittens, six months, whose owner is very ill. They are all very sweet, spayed, leukemia-tested and vaccinated. Please help us save these little lives. The numbers to call for the kittens are 625-2614 or 484-2590.

A jolly good time

I hope that many of you were able to attend our fundraiser on October 9 at the Quail Lodge. If you did, you know how much fun we all had. If you didn't, I hope to see you next time.

The celebrity golf, tennis and croquet tournaments were all sold out and so was the Dinner Dance that evening. Everyone had a marvelous time listening to the beautiful music of Les Brown and his band. It truly was a Sentimental Journey and a day none of us will soon forget. My sincere thanks to all who helped make this a memorable event.

Enjoy your week!

Campus Life

By JAMES GENONE

A 'test' of one's patience

THERE COMES a time in every high school student's life that is to be dreaded. It is a time when all your worst fears are realized. As you make your way into the testing room, you realize that for the next three hours, you will be entrapped in a world of tiny fill-in bubbles, No. 2 pencils and multiple choice questions.

Yes, your nightmare has become reality — you are taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test, better known as the SAT.

The SAT ranks at the top of high school's most unpleasant experiences. You get up at 7 a.m. on a Saturday and then stand in line for at least 20 minutes so you may be accounted for and assigned to a room. Then a proctor spends the next 20 minutes explaining to you how to fill in your name on the answer sheet (as though you'd forgotten after the 60,000 other tests you took in middle school that you filled out the exact same way).

Once the test begins, you have half an hour to complete each of six sections. On some sections, you are expected to complete 40 or 50 questions, so you basically have to guess at the first answer that looks like it might be right, just so you can finish in time.

Other sections are so easy that, after finishing, you must sit without anything to do while time runs out. Personally, I've found counting dots on the test room ceiling can be amusing — at least until you lose count.

During the three hours of test-taking, you are given two breaks. The first lasts five minutes, during which you are expected to break the Olympic record in the 100-yard dash to get to the nearest restroom and back before testing resumes. The second break, which lasts one minute, allows you to stretch your muscles but is totally inadequate.

Finally, when it's all over, you can go home and anxiously await the results. And wait. And wait. Results usually come in one and a half to two months later.

I took the SAT for the first time last January, the week before my birthday. I was sick, I had stayed up late the night before, I ate no breakfast,and I felt as though the world was certain to crash down around me if I made one wrong move. As it turned out I did pretty well.

After some consideration, I determined if I had been more prepared, I would have done even better. So I took the test again in March. I went to bed at 9:30 the night before following a good dinner. I woke up the next morning, totally refreshed, and proceeded to eat a balanced breakfast with toast, juice, and milk. I was completely relaxed when I took the test and, when it was over, I was sure I had scored at least a perfect 1600, if not better.

But, as fate would have it, my scores dropped 90 points. All that effort and I dropped 90 points.

Despite the hard work a student must go through to take the test (fees range from about $25 to $60 depending on how late you sign up and where you have your scores sent), it still produces inordinately skewed results. Tests are different each time, thus performance can depend on whether you take a test suited to you.

Despite this incongruity, the SAT is one of the most important factors in college admissions. Consequently, taking the SAT is probably one of the most important things a student does during his or her high school career.

So, if you hear someone say their time has come to take the test, sympathize with them and wish them luck — they'll need it.

McPherson, Patton clash on environmental issues

space are not swallowed up, he said.

Development areas must be delineated ahead of time, "so that there is certainty on both side, and in advance," Patton explained.

The American dream — as expressed in urban sprawl — "mustn't undermine the long-term economic and environmental vitality of the state," Patton said.

Different view

While McPherson said he opposes "leap-frog development" and supports comprehensive planning, "Government that is close to the people is the best government (to make these decisions)," he said. "We have to be realistic: people are going to come to California."

He said the solution is not the state's intrusion in planning matters, but for local jurisdictions "to be better about following their general plans."

McPherson does concede that his opponent, a key player in halting off-shore oil driving in the Central Coast, is a candidate with the unmatched record on the environment. Yet, McPherson adds, "He has focused on this to the exclusion of everything else."

This campaign has not been exempt from labeling, from both sides.

While Patton said he believes in planned growth that considers the long term first, the short term second, McPherson calls the Democrat "a no-growth candidate."

'Special interest candidate?'

Meanwhile, Patton, not accepting political action committee funding, describes McPherson as "special interest candidate" for doing so.

McPherson has not served public office, but he speaks of his own environmental record. As editorial writer for the Santa Cruz Sentinel, he wrote in opposition to off-shore drilling and in favor of the Monterey Bay Sanctuary as early as 1983.

He has supported or worked for various causes, propositions and booster groups, such as Friends of Long Marine Lab, of which he served as president. "I believe I have legitimate credentials as an environmentalist," he said.

Patton, endorsed by the California League of Conservation Voters and the Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club, is not so easily put on the defensive on the issue of the environment. Most of the time, McPherson is content simply to find other topics.

Burch, Kistenmacher, Yee Steck outline education stances are now living clean – Burch said he can bring a fresh approach to dealing with students who use drugs and alcohol.

"I don't feel we are adequately representing all the students in the system," Burch said, adding that not all students attend universities after high school.

Following the introductions, the forum was opened up to questions from the audience.

Drug and alcohol policy

Still riled over the recent forum on the district's proposed drug and alcohol policy, parents gauged the candidates' support for it.

Yee Steck said she generally favors the policy, but has questions about the portion which pertains to participation in co-curricular activities.

ANNETTE YEE STECK

"I have a little bit of a problem with Carmel schools having the responsibility for taking care of the drug problem," said Yee Steck.

"I think it's a wonderful goal – to have all of our children drug and alcohol free," she added. "But I'm not sure the schools, which have already taken on so many responsibilities beyond educating our children, ought to have the responsibility of monitoring and policing children on a 24-hour basis."

Burch said he is opposed to the co-curricular portion of the policy because he feels drug and alcohol abuse is symptomatic of underlying social and self-esteem problems which need to be addressed.

"We need to address the underlying problems with comprehensive counseling and referrals for students who have substance abuse problems," Burch said.

"We need to give them the tools to make responsible decisions – not take the decision-making power away from them."

Kistenmacher acknowledged that part of the policy needs to be reworked, but said, "I hope what is not lost here is the intent of the policy."

Health care

Another question centered around how the candidates would balance the need to control district health care costs while maintaining the benefits currently offered to its employees.

According to Kistenmacher, almost 20 percent of the last year's operating budget was spent on health care and its administration.

"That's a cost that the district cannot continue to pay," Kistenmacher commented, noting that most major corporations require some cost-sharing by employees, and CUSD employees should be no exception.

"I don't believe the school district can function, take care of the deferred maintenance problem, give raises to teachers and do all of the other things that fall under that budget with health care costs rising to the extent they are.

Concessions taken

"I realize teachers have taken concessions in order to keep these benefits going," he said. "I appreciate that. But I think you have to look at the overall picture here – at the amount of dollars that are being spent on health care on an annual basis."

Yee Steck said that while teachers are perhaps the district's most valuable asset, concessions may have to be made in the coming years. She said the district's general fund has been absorbing "too much of the cost."

RAY BURCH

Burch said he favors restructuring the district's health care policy with an emphasis on preventive medicine.

"I'm not going to be the one to reneg on promises made in the past to teachers," said Burch. "The teachers took pay concessions in exchange for that policy."

"The last place I want to see this district making cuts is the teacher in the classroom," Burch concluded. "Benefits are how we keep good teachers, and good teachers are how we keep a good educational system."

Contraceptives without consent

Paul Ingram, a local parent, asked the candidates if they would support students being able to obtain contraceptives and abortion referrals without parental consent or knowledge.

"I still believe the role of the district is to dispense education, not condoms," Kistenmacher responded.

Yee Steck said she would feel uncomfortable with that. "Unfortunately, not enough (sex) education gets out to students from their parents. If we turn our backs on it, it's a problem which won't go away."

Burch said many teen-agers in Carmel are sexually active, which is a concern with AIDS reaching epidemic proportions.

"We have a disease that kills," Burch declared. "We have to give them the tools they need to not die."

THE CHEFS OF BIG SUR

■ Villa: Fernwood cook has scientific bent

By SUSAN BECK

YOU JUST never know who's flippin' your burger.

Would you believe a molecular biologist? Well, it's true. At least it's true when you stop in at the Fernwood Resort in Big Sur.

Richard Patrick Villa has been cooking hamburgers, hotdogs, ribs and chili at Fernwood for eight years now. He also recently took on a second job with the state parks system maintaining the grounds at the Big Sur Lodge.

Villa, who moved to Big Sur in 1967, has a bachelor's degree in molecular biology from the University of California in San Diego.

From there he went to medical school at the University of Southern California, where he worked as a staff research assistant.

While going to USC, Villa suffered severe migraine headaches from the stress of academics and research.

"My doctor told me to take some time off," said Villa. "So I brought my family to Big Sur."

He was raised in Santa Paula and married at 19 in Big Sur, which is how he came to love the area. By the time he was 26, he had three children.

Villa took whatever jobs he could to stay in Big Sur. He worked for the owner of Nepenthe Restaurant, Lolly Fassett, who, he said, "taught me how to cook."

Odd jobs

He also worked at the River Inn cooking and busing tables. He did a variety of odd jobs and finally, Lee

RICHARD VILLA, the cook at the Fernwood Resort, found a way to earn a living and stay in Big Sur.

MICHAEL HAMMONDS, Trailshead Cafe chef, prefers the straightforward approach to cooking.

Hammonds: New chef at Big Sur Lodge

By SUSAN BECK

THERE ARE two reasons why Michael Hammonds is the chef at the Big Sur Lodge: burnout, and a desire to live in Big Sur.

Before he took the job at the Trailshead Cafe 10 months ago, Hammonds was the corporate executive chef for Scott's Seafood Restaurants in the Bay Area.

There are eight restaurants in the Scott's chain and Hammonds job was to oversee them all.

"I was going to nine meetings a week," said Hammonds. "It had little to do with being a chef."

His career in food service started more than 20 years ago when he and two friends opened a natural food store.

"I had a large garden but didn't know how to cook, said Hammonds. "I taught myself how to cook and somehow ended up working in a restaurant."

Serious cooking

When he decided to get serious about cooking, he apprenticed with a Swiss chef and broke away from the natural food store business because "I wanted to learn the classics, which means working with non-vegetarian foods."

While he was learning the ins-and-outs of classic cuisine, Hammonds saved his money for a sojourn back in France. He stayed six months working in classic French restaurants but was unable to secure a long-term work permit.

He was raised in Germany and France, but always considered it a curse that his name was

Horned owls and hot-rods

SHIVERS SHOT down my spine as I looked into the Great Horned Owl's eyes - glowing gold orbs with black specks at the centers. He twisted his head completely around to look at the commotion going on around him. Some 200 people crowded the lawn at Holman Ranch in Carmel Valley Sunday afternoon, some of them snapping pictures of the momentous occasion: the release of seven rehabilitated owls from the SPCA of Monterey County's George Whittell Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation Center.

I was stunned by the beauty of this animal – its downy speckled feathers and tufts called called "horns".

Unlike the other six owls that had been released, I sensed no struggle from this bird. I held it long enough to face each camera, one at a time, for individual poses. I wanted more than anything to stroke its sleek back, but both my gloved hands were fastened tightly around its fluffy legs. Instead, sensing no retaliation, I leaned down and touched its soft side with my nose. Several guests warned me away, saying I could have been ripped apart by the mighty talons. But I had read the bird. It wasn't going to strike me. Why, just yesterday I had carried on a conversation with a hawk.

Anyway, it was time to release the bird, and with great reluctance, I did. It had been so relaxed in my hands I feared for a moment that it wouldn't fly and would leave me the laughing stock of the group. But in a silent sweep of feathers, it was off. Off to join the other owls or, more likely, to find its own territory.

Flapping through the silvering sky... free at last... I wished for a moment that I was the one flying. It was an unforgettable privilege to release the owl.

Melissa Caster, supervisor for the wildlife center, answered many questions about the birds, such as: they are loners except when mating; their flight is silent because the wind passes through their special serrated wings; and they'll eat anything from insects to lizards - and an occasional cat! Ick!

Jean Theisen and Karen Zelmer talked of Willy the whale and how they'd like to set him free. They spoke beside the delphinium, cosmos and zinnias at the beautiful estate where Lucy the cat sniffed around. She was promptly shooed away before the first bird took to the air, however.

There were gasps when the second bird joined the first. The third bird, unnamed like the others so as to remain wild, was in a big flap and dropped lots of feathers. And Caster said to watch out for the sixth one - it was a biter.

"This is so neat," said Teri Bradley.

Back at the ranch, after elegant hors d'oeuvres, the silent auction was winding down. Eleen Auvil hadn't sold any of her avant garde bronze animals but said she was happy to be there. "I've always loved nature," she said of her work, including a blue-footed booby. She has three cats at home and spends much time outside observing the fauna.

Anne Mills, a founding member of Friends of Monterey County Wildlife, hosts of the event, spoke of the organization that she helped found. "A bunch of us were horrified that there was no place to care for the found wild animals." She had been volunteering with the SPCA for years and decided they needed help to build a wildlife rehabilitation center.

And is it wild!

They have received three bears: one found near Yosemite National Park; another found in a lettuce field in Salinas; and another on top of the Monterey County Courthouse. I told her that alone justifies their existence.

Susan Pius, chairwoman of the event and also a founding member, said she started volunteering for the center after "I became burned out in real estate."

Friends is 200 members strong and through their fund-raising efforts and volunteers, they address what Dr. Dan Anderson of the University of California, Davis said, "When man and wildlife interact, wildlife ends up losing."

Indeed, Haven Jewett-Roberge, current president of friends, said all the owls were orphaned and a couple were injured.

"We found one group at the mushroom composting place," she said. "They were going up the conveyor belt when a guy rescued them and brought them in in a garbage can."

I end with this note: the event netted about $13,000 for the center. The monies will be used for critically

SPCA AUXILIARY, Friends of Monterey County Wildlife, held an enlivening event on Sunday at The Holman Ranch in Carmel Valley. Seven Great Horned Owls were released by raffle winners. Anne Mills, a founding member of friends, and Susan Pius, event chairwoman, posed beside artwork that was auctioned during the event.

ARLINE LOVETT, May Carpenter, and Charlie Lovett admired some of the artwork during the art fair and silent auction.

SUNSHINE POURED over the Holman Ranch as guests examined the water pouring from a fountain at the historic stone ranch.

THERE WAS a jubilant full house for the 30th anniversary of Carmel Valley Manor.

Baby boomers groovin' on Alvarado

Cherry's Jubilee, a fund-raiser last weekend for Salinas Valley Memorial Hospital's new patient care center, attracted few Ninja teens to the opening Cruise Night and sponsor/VIP party at Stanton Center in Monterey.

No-siree. Rather, it seemed to attract every over-thirty, middle-aged, post teeny bopper, daddy-o, hot-rodder, hippie, be-bopper, zoot suited, and razzmataz fanatic in Monterey County and from around the state.

The oldest farts cooed over the line-up of Model A's and T's. Sherry and Richard Gomes arrived in gold satin jackets bearing their club name, Over the Hill Gang. This was a coming out celebration for their 1923 Model T Ford T-bucket, with two four-barrels and a beer keg for a gas tank.

At that moment a chopped '50 (something) slinked by, flames burning its yellow sides. Beside it was a Verne Horton's lovely little charcoal grey/red interior '56 T-bird. "You don't take them out often," he said at the reception party for he and others who sponsored the jubilee.

Shelly Schachter, married to Alice Kinsler, executive director of SVMH Foundation, said he had courted her in a '66 MG which he recently sold.

As "I Found My Thrill on Blueberry Hill" blared on the loudspeakers, Basil Mills spoke lovingly of his first car - a '53 Ford coupe. And his wife, Eve, said dad first taught her how to drive a dune buggy.

About that time a gargantuan trailer truck, painted sky blue and with enough chrome to blind me, honked its horn. The sound and strength was exactly that of a freight train. So I got out of there.

What a night!

By the way, I include myself in the middle-aged category. It showed all over as I waxed poetic about a '50 Studebaker, a '58 Chevy and an assortment of hot rods...

GOOD OL' BOYS gathering: Sam Lavorato III, Sam Lavorato Jr., Bob House and Ron Granberg turned out for the sponsor VIP celebration at Stanton Center to help kick off the car extravaganza Cherry's Jubilee, sponsored in part by their law firm.

A MAJOR event sponsor was First National Bank of Salinas, represented by the cool and casual Verne and Joyce Horion.

THIS PEACH-COLORED '51 Studebaker was one of the cherriest cars at the jubilee. Proud owners Alan and Renea Wood of Salinas pose beside it.

■ Chamber Anniversary ■ Sheriff's Barbecue ■ Racquet Club's Anniversary

ANN OLIVIER, secretary for the Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce, shares a moment with Randy Randazzo, a past recipient of the chamber's prestigious Good Egg Award.

SOMETIMES, EVERYTHING seems to happen at once. Or so it seemed in Carmel Valley, where anniversaries and events were being celebrated throughout the week's end.

Forty years ago, a small group of local businessmen established the Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce. Today, there are 250 people involved in the chamber's activities. Many of those members attended the chamber's 40th anniversary celebration at the White Oak Plaza in Carmel Valley Village last Thursday, Oct. 21.

On Saturday, it was fun in the sun for more than 100 people, who ventured to Quail Meadows Lake for the annual Monterey County Sheriff's Advisory Council barbecue.

The sheriff's department provided demonstrations and the council held an auction, prizes included a round of golf for four at Quail Lodge.

Under the giant green and white tent, it was easy to see why everyone appeared to be having a good time, and for such a good cause.

Later in the day, more festivities got underway, when the Carmel Valley Racquet Club celebrated its 25th anniversary. Despite the rain, the crowds did not disperse. Instead, everyone gathered inside the lounge, cheering kudos for the club's owners, Jan and Dennis Shepherd.

All in all, it was a great weekend in Carmel Valley.

Hammonds enjoys 'rare opportunity' to live and work in Big Sur

Back in San Francisco, he opened the City Yacht Club on Pier 33, which The San Francisco gave a three-and-a-half star rating.

From there, it was all uphill. Or, downhill, depending on how you look at it.

Last year, a friend of Hammonds was offered the chef's position at the Big Sur Lodge but couldn't take it. Knowing how tired Hammonds was of the corporate race, he asked him if he was interested in the job.

"It was a rare opportunity to work and live in Big Sur," said Hammonds. "And, the Trailshead Cafe is the only restaurant where I've worked that has a picture window looking out on to a river."

Since he arrived here, he has diligently worked to put the Trailshead Restaurant back on its feet. The family-orientated menu has been changed, leaving more opportunity to broaden the dining choices.

"A lot of special dishes that I thought might be slow moving are dominating," said Hammonds. "It's a good indication that I'm going in the right direction."

Seafood is a staple item being that he gets it from the local fishermen who catch it right over the hill from the restaurant. But his favorite overall dish is the pepper steak with a Roquefort cheese sauce.

"It makes all the classic moves," he observed. "But ends up being something most people have not enjoyed."

Straightforward menu

Hammonds doesn't aspire to "blow anyone away with ambiance and massive presentations." He thinks a lot of California cuisine has gotten out of hand. For example, he noted Mesquite cooking is the most "horrendous" cooking process that modern chefs have provided to the public.

"It's so dangerous," he added. "It's really bad for you. It's carcinogenic. You can't tell me it's better than oakwood. It's just something someone decided to do that took off. There are a lot of fun and creative things to do, but food is food.

"A restaurant is a place where you go and have others restore you — we've lost sight of that concept."

Hammonds plans to incorporate the symbolic theme of bringing all of the trails together at one spot by offering foods from all over the world. The menu is not extravagant, he concedes. But firmly believes the restaurant is on an upward trend.

"The destination is Big Sur," he remarked. "I just want to accent that."

Villa sees cooking as a service; Fernwood also his social life

Ergovick, the manager of Fernwood, offered him a job behind the grill.

At one point, Villa tried to get back into medical school. After several failed attempts, he visited with the dean of USC's medical school.

"He told me if I had come into his office with a suitcase filled with $20,000, I could get back into school — no problem," said Villa. "Tuition went up from $4,000 a year to $20,000 in ten years. I didn't have the money."

Tulane University in New Orleans was interested in Villa. But, again, no money. So, he chose the next best thing to keep his hand in the medical profession. He decided to enroll in a nursing program at Monterey Peninsula College. But, like before, he ran out of money.

"I would have liked to have been a doctor," said Villa. "But I had a family to raise. Now that my kids are grown up it would be nice to get back into the medical profession. However, at 47, the chances are not good."

Villa is very proud of his children. He has two sons. One is a gardener and the other works in the retail business. His daughter has a degree in French literature from the University of California at Santa Cruz.

At various times after his divorce, Villa raised at least one of his children and sometimes all of them on his own.

"Cooking is what I did because it was available," recalled Villa. "I like the creative aspect of cooking and it's a serviee that you can provide for people. Besides, when I was raising my kids, somehow cooking worked. Cooking was the bread and butter job. I could make enough for my family and still live in Big Sur."

Fernwood suits Villa well. He said its the main local hangout in Big Sur because it's the most relaxed and congenial place around.

He enjoys cooking and a chance to see all of his friends while he's working.

"I'm always working," said Villa. "So Fernwood is my social life."

British Film Institute honors Clint Eastwood

IT MEANT that Carmel's former mayor shared a handshake with Prince Charles of England.

And it meant additional recognition.

Charles represented the royal family when the British Film Institute (BFI) honored Clint Eastwood with a fellowship "for his unique contribution as an actor and director."

The ceremony occurred on a recent Sunday evening at the BFI Auditorium in London. Eastwood spoke briefly.

CV residents air subdivision worries

By SUSAN BECK

SOME CARMEL Valley residents are challenging the proposed 29-unit Veeder Ranch subdivision on East Garzas Road in upper Carmel Valley.

Lee Rieman, a member of the Upper Carmel Valley Advisory Committee, reported a number of Carmel Valley residents are "up in arms" about the possibility of increased traffic along a one-way bridge on Boronda Road north of Garzas Road.

Rieman, also a member of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, spoke to board members at the association's monthly meeting Wednesday, Oct. 13.

"Apparently, a county planner made a statement indicating the bridge would be adequate for another 29 houses," said Rieman. "The residents are concerned about safety, especially about the safety of children."

Recommendations have been suggested to expand the old Army Corps bridge to two lanes with a pedestrian crossing, said Rieman. "As it is, the bridge is very narrow."

According to Rieman, Tim Condon, owner of the 83-acre Veeder Ranch, also is asking for a variance to waive county requirements under Title 21 that states nothing can be built on a 30 percent slope.

Robert Greenwood, board member and chairman of the Carmel Valley Subdivision Evaluation Committee, informed the board his committee had approved the Veeder Ranch subdivision with an overall score of 82 percent last year. The evaluation committee reviews proposed subdivision to make sure they adhere to the Carmel Valley Master Plan.

"Our committee gave a passing score to the Veeder subdivision," said Greenwood. "But we do not have provisions to make decisions about variances."

Rieman said Condon is requesting a maximum limit of 5,000 square feet per house on one-acre-plus parcels. The subdivision would include four inclusionary housing units.

Polly's search continues

will see to the staffing of tables at Carmel Post Office (both the downtown and the Rio Rd. outposts) and Pebble Beach Post Office. Purpose: raise tax deductible funds so that the Petaluma search center can buy postage to send out more of the informational flyers.

According to search spokespersons in Petaluma, $200,000 has been spent thus far on mailing seven million flyers all over the country. The tables also will be at post offices in Monterey and Pacific Grove.

"Joe Klaas told me last weekend's mailings cost $60,000," Becky said. "This (fund drive) is one way we can help. As the mother of two children, I identify absolutely with Polly's parents and grandparents. And I'm sure many hundreds of other local residents do too."

She said Joe, Carmel author who has devoted all of his time to the search center since its inception, will come back home and visit with people at the various tables on Thursday.

Becky said any checks to be offered to table attendants should be made out to the Polly Klaas Search Fund. Joe will take these up to the Petaluma center.

Hunter said she became involved last Wednesday after reading about Polly's abduction in The Pine Cone. Since she went public with her telephone number, she added, 300 volunteers have spread 6,000 flyers all over the peninsula and Salinas.

"On Tuesday," Becky said, "we shipped out 500 flyers for distribution in Santa Cruz. It's not so much that Polly and her kidnapper might be here. This area gets so many tourists — someone may see the child or that man upon returning home."

The Carmel Pine Cone

Obituaries

Gladys H. Larson

Gladys Helga Larson, a longtime Carmel resident, died of cancer Oct. 12 at her home. She was 84.

Born Dec. 29, 1908, in DeKalb, Ill., Miss Larson had lived in Carmel for 20 years. She was a graduate of Northern Illinois University and did graduate work at Northwestern University.

In the 1950s, she was an executive assistant of residence halls at Stanford University. She retired in 1973 and moved to Carmel, where she was an active supporter of the Carmel Foundation and was a major contributor to the fountain dedicated to the memory of the late Robert Moluski.

She had no immediate relatives. A memorial service was held at the Little Chapel by-the-Sea in Pacific Grove. Following cremation, her ashes were scattered at sea. The Paul Mortuary was in charge of arrangements. It is suggested that memorial contributions be sent to the donor's favorite charity.

Ralph Linsley

Ralph Linsley, a pianist and accompanist, died Sept. 25 in Pasadena, California. He was 90.

Born in New Haven, Connecticut, Mr. Linsley was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Yale University Music School, studied in Paris and received a masters of music degree from the University of Southern California.

He was honored by USC as the outstanding music alumnus in 1967, and received a Certificate of Merit from Yale in 1974. He was a member of Pi Kappa Lambda National Honorary Music Society and Phi Kappa Phi at USC.

Mr. Linsley was associated with the Carmel Bach Festival from 1936 as a pianist, harpsichordist and continuo player until his retirement in 1973 as general coordinator.

During his long career as a pianist he performed with musical groups both small and large, but perhaps his greatest talent was as an accompanist.

He toured widely both in this country and abroad with such notable artists as singers Nan Merriman and Dorothy Kirsten, and cellist Gilbert Reese.

He is survived by his niece, Beatrice Chute of Arcadia, California and his nephew, Linsley Wyant of Soquel, California.

James Farrow Jr.

James Farrow Jr. of Pebble Beach, a retired career soldier, died Oct. 13 at the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. He was 74.

Born Oct. 24, 1918, in Porterdale, Ga., Mr. Farrow had lived for 30 years in Pacific Grove and Pebble Beach.

Beach Cleanup

CRA Beach Cleanup set for Saturday

REMOVING THE remains of beach fires that blacken the white sands of Carmel Beach will be the special focus of this month's Carmel Residents Association's two-hour cleanup that begins at 10 a.m. on Saturday, Oct. 23.

Volunteers, including newcomers, are asked to meet before 10 a.m. at Scenic Road and 13th Avenue for a briefing and coffee and doughnuts.

Gardening volunteers who plan to prune shrubs and ground covers on the Scenic Walkway should meet at 13th Avenue or go directly to 8th Avenue and join Diane Martinez, city gardener.

For walkway workers, gloves and pruning shears are recommended and, if available, knee pads.

For the beach cleaners, gloves and a small cardboard box would be useful, according to event organizers. Screening devices and plastic bags will be provided.

Thus far, 145 individuals have participated in the beach cleanups.

At the last session on Sept. 25, a total of 41 volunteers took part, 19 of them newcomers, including two teenagers.

Of the 19 new participants, 13 were not residents of Carmel-by-the-Sea, but told organizers they were admirers of Carmel Beach and wanted to help keep it beautiful.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

Models used to be considered "over the hill" by age 30, but not anymore. Advertisers and fashions magazines now welcome models with "laugh lines" and gray hair, and top modeling agencies have set up special divisions to fill requests for mature-looking women. The reason: Almost 100-million American consumers are over age 40. Mature models are "classic," not "older" women, says an agency executive. Says another: "It's OK to have lines now. It's OK to have gray hair."

The different ways to say 'taxes'

WHEN PRESIDENT Clinton talks about health care, some of his opponents quickly scream: "more taxes." What are insurance premiums if they are mandated? There are different opinions.

Not long ago, when a small town government (read City of Carmel) decided to increase "user fees," some voices were raised, "This is the wrong time to raise taxes."

Some people believe every new cost brought about by government is, in fact, a tax. Technically this is not true — but only technically.

The current flap over the city's decision to enforce the truck delivery fee (a $60 per year "special license") raises issues apart from the problems it has given Carmel business people and delivery companies. (See Carmel Pine Cone, Oct. 14.)

A little background may be in order.

User fees and special charges are intended to cover the "actual costs" of doing city business. For example, if you apply for a development permit, the city incurs expenses associated with your project. The city as a whole does not receive service from your request.

The special license for delivery trucks is related. It is your truck that is wearing down city streets, so you help offset those costs.

The city has been lax about collecting some fees and updating others. When City Administrator Jere Kersnar came on board this year, he quickly urged the council to raise fees and approve brand-new ones.

Because fees seek to cover actual costs — a sound fiscal objective — there is ready justification for asking for more money.

However, in the final analysis, everyone knows even user fees are negotiable; they are not scientific. They can be adjusted either way and are subject to politics: During the 1993-94 budget process, tour bus fees were added to the list, but an unpopular proposal for admission fees at cultural events was dropped.

When council members defend the delivery fee by saying trucks tear up the streets, their argument seems weak.

Goods must enter the city. And sales tax helps fund police, fire and the myriad of services that benefit the public as a whole. There is no way to determine precisely how much each vehicle actually erodes infrastructure.

Ultimately, user fees and special licenses — in type and amount — can only be arbitrary.

When delivery companies avoid Carmel, businesses are affected; when businesses compensate by jacking up prices, the consumer is affected. It technically may not be a tax, but the impacts are the same.

Sure enough, for governing purposes, we need to distinguish between taxes, fees, surcharges and business licenses. But all these revenue sources go toward covering the "actual costs" of running government.

Fees and licenses sound less political and more technical than taxes. Yet we know: where money is concerned, politics is never far behind. Even in a small towns like Carmel, the community will notice — and sometimes protest — the burden of new charges, however packaged.

CHS mascot change? Heavens, why?

WHAT A shame the Carmel High School Associated Student Body is spending time and energy contemplating an ill-advised change to a part of campus tradition!

"The Padres" — that mascot, that rallying cry — dates back to the 1940s. We wonder: Why the fuss now, some five decades later?

The suggestion of a change poses the question of whether today's students lack appreciation for a long-standing tradition. For the moment, we can think of many advantages to the status quo, but none to a change.

We recognize the value of student participation, and we wish to encourage it at every turn. But let us channel our energies elsewhere.

Outraged with book review

Dear Editor:

I am writing to express my outrage at the book review of Femicide:The Politics of Woman Killing.

It is a well-documented book chronicling the ever increasing violence toward women that is happening worldwide. The stories are horrific and true. To pretend this is not an epidemic or that these numbers are inflated is ludicrous and insulting.

You can rarely open a paper without reading about a woman being murdered, and yes, it is usually committed by some man she knew and trusted. Check out the front page of the Oct. 17 Monterey County Herald for yet another incident.

Call the Domestic Violence Shelter or Rape Crisis Center. Hundreds of women are being brutalized every day. Does the reviewer actually believe that it is all right to murder a woman because she may have been "verbally abusive or threw things at the man she lived with?"

That is what he insinuated. Domestic violence has too long been tolerated. Often this behavior is passed on from generation to generation. A child who sees his father abuse his mother is much more likely to go on to be an abusive husband. The daughter that sees that same behavior often chooses a violent man to marry. It is a sickness that this society needs to recognize and deal with.

The sanctity of a woman's life is not a radical feminist idea. I recommend that your reviewer call Men's Alternatives to Violence. And I encourage your paper to take a serious look at the kind of damage this offensive type of article can do.

Our community would be better served by articles that deal with the many fine agencies that are trying to stop these heinous crimes.

Divorce game isn't amusing

Dear Editor:

Regarding the article, "Divorce as a Game" (The Carmel Pine Cone, Sept. 30), I'm not at all amused. Nor for that matter am I surprised, given the popularity of the inane and, presumably, the inanity of the populace.

Since most marriages end in divorce, I suspect that many readers may share

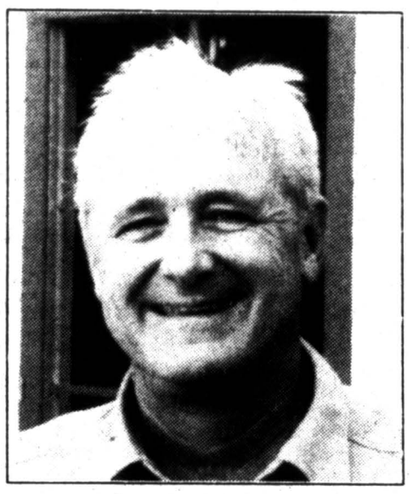
Carmel Commentary

By BILL PARSONS

The plight of the garbage man

IT'S TOUGH to be a garbage man in the age of recycling. Don't get me wrong. Recycling is a thriving endeavor in Carmel-by-the-Sea. In fact, the entire Carmel area is a raging hotbed of recycling exuberance.



BILL PARSONS

But here's the rub. The more people recycle, the less garbage they produce. The less garbage they produce, the less income they produce for the garbage man. I know it may not seem that way to the typical rate payer in the greater Carmel service area.

In fact, it probably feels like garbage rates have been running amuck for the past few years. They have. The price of garbage collection and disposal has increased dramatically in the last few years.

Not the culprit

Ironically, in this age of recycling, recycling is not the culprit. Recycling costs eat up only four or five cents out of the rate payer's dollar. But that's about to change in a big way real soon. The main factor in the escalating garbage bills lately has been price of disposal. Disposal costs are up 180 percent in the last four years.

Wait! Before you curse the conscientious folks who do such a great job of directing and managing the Marina landfill, understand it's not their fault. The fault (if it can be called that) resides with a continuum of state and federal legislation mandating a dizzying array of environmental safeguards to protect our precious groundwater.

Purposely, I avoid use of the word overkill here, although there are those who would use the word aggressively. Yet, the safeguards do have their heart in the right place: Clean water!

Recycling dilemma

But I digress. I started to relate the recycling dilemma. So I will. Market forces dictate that the dearer the price of a commodity, the less it will be consumed. There is no reason to believe this dictate will not hold true in the case of garbage service. As the price of garbage collection rises, so will the service demand diminish.

The price of garbage collection is about to become a whole lot dearer in January. And it's all for the cause of recycling. The state legislature, through its definitive recycling act known as Assembly Bill 939, has mandated that Californians divert (recycle) 25 percent of their waste stream by 1995. Locally, we are somewhere in the 15 to 20 percent range. Congratulations to you all. You really know how to recycle. But we are still a little shy of the goal.

To attain that goal by 1995, your garbage man-cum-recycle man must expand recycling collection and build a processing and sorting facility to reach the 25-percent diversion mandate.

The cost of obliging the state mandate will impact local garbage service rates with an approximate 18.4 percent increase. About half of the rate increase will go toward the processing and sorting facility to be built in Castroville. The other half will go toward a facility at the Marina landfill, which will divert and process concrete, asphalt and wood wastes.

The Marina landfill facility won't go on-line until early 1996. It will up the diversion level toward 40 percent in pursuit of the state's lofty diversion goal of 50 percent by the year 2000.

More increases are due

Now to the heart of the matter. More increases are due for January of 1995 and 1996. We will also need to implement a separate yard waste collection program in pursuit of the 50 percent diversion goal. In other words, the costs are going to spiral upward, ever upward. The costs of new recycling will be set in a series of rate increases for basic garbage service. There won't be a separate rate for recycling. The only option for large producers of garbage will be to recycle more and more to decrease the magnitude of the garbage bill.

So, there will be a decrease in revenue flow to the disposal service without an accompanying decrease or savings in level of service. Thus starts the vicious circle reminiscent of water bills during the recent drought: A cutback in consumption results in an increased rate.

One of the most painful aspects of being the garbage man under these circumstances is that he must be the point man in implementation of these untimely and burdensome rate increases. He must pursue them in a public hearing before the city council and the board of supervisors. And then he must announce them to and exact them from his faithful customers.

Could have been avoided

Recycling really didn't have to turn out so costly. The state legislature could have ignored the demands of the state's manufacturing lobby and passed a complete recycling bill, one that would have mandated that not only you and I recycle 25 and 50 percent but that our manufacturers purchase those percentages of recyclables from us. This would have created a market economy in recycling commodities. We would have been able to sell the stuff for a price that would have eliminated the need for rate increases to accomplish recycling.

Instead of getting an average of two cents a pound for your paper, bottles and cans (which pays for about 40 percent of the costs of recycling), we would be getting five or six cents a pound (which would have paid for all costs).

Well... the legislature didn't do it that way, which kind of makes it tough to be a garbage man in the age of recycling.

my views. How absurd: a board game on divorce now competing for market shares with such pop diversions as computer sex and mayhem for fun (and profit).

The opportunities for the entrepreneur seem limitless. Why not some playful games on child abuse or the homeless or AIDS or Alzheimer's disease?

Can't we make better use of our leisure time? Anyone still entertained by divorce after being assaulted by the system may find more gratification as adults in playing at helping to reform the legal process itself.

Or, are we actually content with childish games? Do we really only want to feel better, ignoring the very real damage divorce is increasingly causing our own children, ourselves and our common future?

What a great 'Day'!

Dear Editor:

For all of you who went, wasn't it great? And for those of you who didn't, don't pass it up next year!

I'm speaking of the wonderful celebration at the Gold Club at Quail Lodge on Saturday, Oct. 9 — "Doris Day's Best Friends: A Sentimental Journey." What a Day!! (Pun definitely intended.)

The daytime was full of fun and laughs with celebrity golf, tennis, and croquet, and the "Evening Under the Big Top" with Les Brown and His Band of Renown was truly magical.

But the most important part, of course, was the fact that it was all done for charity. Your local recipients are The Family and Children's Services, The Boys' and Girls' Club of Monterey, and Peninsula Outreach.

I'd like to speak on behalf of those who can't write "Letters to the Editors" — our 4-legged friends, the animals. The final charity to benefit from Saturday's fundraiser was the Doris Day Pet Foundation and, as the proud owner/human companion of a DDPF dog, who very possibly would have been euthanized had he not been rescued by this marvelous organization, I'd like to

Yee Steck for CUSD board

Dear Editor:

We are fortunate to have running for the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education a woman with the expertise to help solve the financial problems facing our schools.

Annette Yee Steck is a specialist in school district finance, currently with over 90 other districts as clients. Our present board acknowledges their lack of experience in matters of public finance; Annette will be a great resource for the board and the school district.

There are three other reasons why we are voting for Annette. First, she has no other political goals or hidden agendas. She is not a politician with higher aspirations but a professional with the relevant skills and the desire to contribute to her community. Second, as anyone who knows her can attest, she is people-oriented. She understands the importance of working cooperatively with others. And third, since she is a parent, we know she'll keep the interests of our children at heart.

We urge people to vote for Annette Yee Steck for the Carmel School board.

Best-equipped candidate

Dear Editor:

Campaigning for position on the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education has been relatively low-keyed, as campaigns in this region go, and perhaps rightly so.

Let's face it: This school district does not have the major problems other districts in this state have, thanks to adequate management by past boards. Selection of a new member to the board should be based on preservation and improvement of what now exists.

We believe Annette Yee Steck is best-equipped to meet these goals.

Lack of financial soundness has caused the downfall of many school districts throughout this state. To avoid this, 94 districts have contracted with Annette and have benefitted by her financial advice. The CUSD board has identified problems of health care costs, capital improvements and maintenance, and program augmentation costs—right up Annette's alley.

At this time, the current board is lacking someone with Annette's expertise. It only makes sense to vote for Annette, and get for free what 94 other school districts pay to get.

Thodos for water board

Dear Editor:

Most of us would agree that water is the most important issue on the Monterey Peninsula. Its management includes the development of constructive uses of waste water.

In the upcoming election for the Carmel Area Wastewater District, we have the opportunity to add an experienced new voice to the Board of Directors — Carmel architect John Thodos. Thodos has no ties with the past board and vast experience from years of public service.

Thodos is an agent of change. He has a canny ability to ask the probing question and to challenge conventional wisdom. I have had the opportunity to see him in action often. He is not intimidated by authority or position and is willing to make people who are comfortable in their views squirm.

He is precisely the kind of person we need in public service today. Thodos is no rubber stamp.

He is a serious candidate for the board of the wastewater district. He even took the time to prepare a statement for the sample ballot, a task which his opponents apparently found too taxing.

Please join me in voting for John Thodos for the board of directors of the Carmel Area Wastewater District. Thodos will get results.

Yes on Proposition 174

Dear Editor:

As a teacher of 30 years in California public schools, I urge you to vote yes on Proposition 174. I feel this would make schools more competitive and thus better. Parents should have the opportunity to choose the school they wish their children to attend.

Public schools will not lose money as public educators will still receive 40 percent of the state budget as guaranteed by the law.

This proposition allows public school teachers and parents to have greater control and local schools can be freed of the crushing financial and regulatory weight of the state and county bureaucracy.

The state legislative analysts testified before the state legislature that the measure has greater potential to be cost effective (saving $1 billion) than cost prohibitive.

Also, rather than the taxpayers having to spend to build new schools for the 1.8 million estimated new students to enter the system in the next eight years, private school buildings now in existence often unfilled can help absorb these pupils.

The National Teachers Association, which is mounting opposition on television, is the largest and wealthiest lobby in the world. For many years, I paid my dues until I realized the causes they espoused were not mine, and I could not condone their tactics. I could see no direct classroom benefits from money they spent.

Public schools are still drug ridden. Discipline and test scores continue to decline. The situation is not getting better. I think an alternative is needed. Proposition 174 provides such an alternative.

Vote yes!

At the crossroads

BART ROWLEY, Carmel High School's outstanding cross-country runner, is all by himself in a recent meet as he prepares to pass Portola's Cross along CHS' home course. Rowley continues to excel as the boys' team's top runner.

Catalina's Carmel connection

■ Cougars' tennis team is 14-0 and gunning for more

By GARTH MERRILL

THE GIRLS' tennis team at Santa Catalina has several young guns. And after shooting down league champ Stevenson twice this season and stringing together a 14-0 record overall, are they taking aim on the Mission Trail Athletic League championship?

"You bet. We're already looking to it," said Catalina head coach Sherry Blair.

The MTAL tennis championships will be held Friday, Oct. 29, while team championships for the Central Coast Section are slated for Nov. 10.

The Cougars are 11-0 in the MTAL, including an easy 7-0 win over Pacific on the home court Tuesday, Oct. 19.

Catalina has come this far largely on the strength of its four singles players, who are all from Carmel — freshmen Ashlee Ferlito and Lisa Walgenbach, sophomore Margaret Benner and junior Marisa Maclennan.

Only five of the team's 20 players are seniors.

One of those seniors is team captain Abiah Folger, last season's No. 1 singles player. This year, Folger plays the No. 1 doubles slot, indicative of the depth on the Cougar roster. Because of her experience, coaches say Folger's move has "really anchored the team."

Ironically, Blair said her squad's youth is compensated for by its maturity.

"They have things together. They're organized; they're all top students," she noted.

But maturity alone doesn't win championships and Blair said her team has to remain healthy and

Padres drubbed by King City; look to snap 3-game losing streak against Alisal

FOLLOWING LAST weekend's 28-6 loss to King City, the Carmel High School Padres' football team looks to rebound against Alisal.

Kickoff is slated for 7:30 p.m. Friday (Oct. 22) in Alisal.

Alisal (1-2, 1-5 overall), which is led by senior quarterback Hugo Mariscal, dropped a 14-6 decision to Gonzales last week. If the Padres want to beat the Trojans, they must stop Mariscal, who has put forth several outstanding efforts this season both passing and running the ball.

In the Friday, Oct. 15 game in King City, the Padres went up against a well-prepared Mustang team. Carmel didn't perform particularly poorly on offense, but King City played perfect defense, covering the Padres' outstanding receivers and putting constant pressure on Padre quarterback John Geisler.

Geisler finished 11 of 26 for 88 yards. He also threw an interception, and was sacked four times.

Despite Carmel's lack of offense, the game would have been much closer if the defense had played up to its potential. The Padres seemingly missed more tackles in last week's game than some teams miss in an entire season.

In contrast to the effort put out the previous two weeks against Palma and St. Ignatius, Carmel's defense looked as though it ran out of gas.

The lone bright spot for the Padres was Dustin Nagai, who gives 100 percent every week. Against the Mustangs, Nagai had two interceptions and two blocked kicks to go along with 46 receiving yards on five catches.

Carmel is now 0-2 in the Mission Trail Athletic League and 2-4 overall.

The Padres' junior varsity chalked up a 14-6 win against King City. Quarterback John Martine and wideout Robbie Shepner tallied touchdowns, while R.J. Whitfield converted both extra points.

• Girls Volleyball

Since Notre Dame has dominated in recent years, it wasn't much of a shock when it blanked Carmel High 3-0 on Tuesday, October 12. However, the surprise of the week came the following Thursday, when the Padres took on Robert Louis Stevenson.

The match started out slow, with the

RLS to battle King City on Saturday

EVEN THOUGH the Palma Chieftains lost a football game earlier this season, their 42-6 rout of Robert Louis Stevenson last Friday night (Oct. 15) showed they are still a dominating force in the Mission Trail Athletic League.

Palma's strength and capabilities were clearly evident as it handed the Pirates their most lopsided loss of the season.

The victory ups the Chieftains' record to 3-0 in MTAL play and 5-1 overall, while the Pirates drop to 0-2 in league and 3-3 overall.

Stevenson will try to corral its first league win Saturday (Oct. 23) when it hosts King City in Pebble Beach. The Mustangs (2-1 in MTAL play, 3-3 overall) come into the game fresh off a convincing 28-6 last Friday over Carmel High.

The varsity kickoff is set for 2 p.m. It is Parents Weekend on the RLS campus, so a good crowd is expected.

In their game against Palma, RLS boasted some solid individual performance, but for the most part the Pirates were overpowered on offense and defense.

One of the Pirate players commented, "Their [Chieftains] offense is unstoppable. We tried everything we could. It just wasn't our night." To nullify the shutout, sophomore Sekou Sanyika caught a pass from quarterback Tom Orradre on a 20-yard touchdown in the fourth quarter. A notable performance for the Chieftains came from senior Jeff Pluta, who scored a 16-yard touchdown, blocked a punt and forced a fumble leading to a Chieftain score.

Junior Laith Agha stood out for the Pirates with two long kickoff returns.

Palma's junior varsity and freshmen both recorded shutouts. The Chieftains' JVs won 40-0; the freshman 35-0.

The RLS-King City junior varsity kicks off Saturday at 11:45 a.m., preceded by the freshman game at 9:45 a.m.

• Other teams stay active

Today (Oct. 21) will be a busy day for RLS sporting teams. Consider: the girls' tennis and volleyball teams travel to Gonzales; the cross-country team participates in the MTAL Center Meet at Toro Park; the girls' swimming team travels to Carmel; and the water polo team hosts Hollister.

Padres dropping the first two games, losing the second 15-13. Then came the comeback.

A fired-up Padre team hit the floor with blazing serves and stifling blocks. Backed by a boisterous crowd comprised mostly of parents and football players, who had just finished practice, the Padres stormed back to win the last three games, taking the final one 15-10.

"It was great having them (the football players) supporting us," said standout senior Robin Retherford. "We really had a home court advantage for this game."

• Cross-Country

If the mark of a good team is steady improvement, then the Padre runners definitely have passed the test. In action last week, the women runners defeated Notre Dame, but fell to Gonzales.

Denise Cardemon won the race, and outstanding performances were turned in by Jennifer Eyerman, Lily and Adele Woytak, and Georgia Benigni.

The boys, who lost to both Gonzales and Palma, were forced to compete without senior leader Andy Cook. But Bart Rowley did his usual thing and finished first, followed by Jason Kistenmacher.

Winning and losing aside, the biggest revelation is the improvement of the runners. Every single runner has improved his or her time from the first meet of the season by at least a minute, with the greatest improvements up to four minutes.

• Girls Tennis

Carmel opened the week on Tuesday, Oct. 12 with a tough 6-1 loss to Notre Dame, which hurt the Padres' chances of finishing in third place.

The Padres rebounded the next day with a 7-0 rout of Pacific Grove, but went on to lose the following two days to Central Coast powerhouses Robert Louis Stevenson and Santa Catalina.

Veronique Piercy moved up to singles and played well, with strong efforts also being provided by Corrina Tulua, Jessica Moss, Haruno Ito, Darlene Tulua and Arianne Bauista.

Croquet, anyone?

■ Carmel man seeks to start national chapter on peninsula

IT'S A lot more than stepping on your opponents' ball and knocking it into oblivion, explains Carmel's Ron Meyer.

The subject is croquet and Meyer had an opportunity to witness some keen interest in the sport at the Oct. 9 Doris Day benefit affair held at Quail Lodge.

"There is a lot more to croquet than the game we used to play in the backyard," said Meyer, a member of the Jack Osborn all-star croquet team.

Despite his proficiency, Meyer was a first-round loser in the Day benefit.

"It's very tough to concentrate on your game when Loni Anderson is your partner," Meyer explained.

On a serious note, Meyer and Moreland Brown are trying to start a local chapter of the United State Croquet Assocation.

"A great deal of interest was shown at Doris' benefit and we believe it would be a great financial and social benefit to have a course located in Carmel Valley or Pebble Beach," Meyer said.

Interested participants can contact Meyer at 625-5558.

EVERY WEEK during the football season, Doug Thompson, managing editor of The Carmel Pine Cone, will challenge a guest forecaster in picking the top 10 games from the pro and collegiate slate.

LAST WEEK: Neither The Editor nor Craig Johnston, head coach of the Carmel High School varsity football team, could be too proud of his effort in Week 7. Craig recovered from a 0-3 start to finish at 4-6, while The Editor limped home at 4-6 after starting 2-1. Craig moved into a tie when the Raiders defeated Denver on a last-second field goal in the Monday night matchup.

Christopher Plummer: A new kind of star will shine in Carmel

By MOLLY D. WHITEHEAD

HOLLYWOOD HAS come to Carmel before and will do so again. But this weekend a new kind of star will shine in the opening show of Performance Carmel's new season.

Over the last four decades, Christopher Plummer has played leading roles in numerous Broadway shows and has appeared in more than 50 movies, including The Sound of Music and The Man Who Would Be King. He is known as a consummate Shakespearean actor and has garnered a Tony Award, an Emmy Award and a membership in the Theatre's Hall of Fame.

And, to top it all off, the Canadian-born Plummer will perform a one-man show, A Word or Two Before You Go, at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 23 at Sunset Center.

'Fairly autobiographical'

In a telephone interview with The Carmel Pine Cone, Plummer was circumspect in describing the show, saying that he didn't want to "give it away." But he did reveal that the story, which he wrote, is "fairly autobiographical" and is woven through with selections from poetry and prose which "give an impression of what moments in literature I remember and love from when I was young."

The authors represented range from Lewis Carroll to Herman Melville and from Bernard Shaw to Vladimir Nabokov. The idea for the show arose from a request by a library in the Connecticut town in which Plummer lived.

"They asked me to give a lecture," Plummer says. "The idea was repellent because I always want to try and entertain." So Plummer decided to tell a story instead. "By God, it worked. They loved it. And I thought this would make a good evening. Very simple, just me telling stories."

'Fun, not dry'

The actor promises that his show is "fun, not dry," adding, "I keep finding more laughs and putting them in. It's almost like a confession, like being on a psychiatrist's couch."

The theme of the evening revolves around Plummer's sense of gratitude to his family for teaching him to appreciate the power and beauty of language.

"My family brought me up to love books," Plummer explains. "They made me see the fun of developing my imagination, which is what we're on this earth for."

Her artwork has been featured in galleries across the country. Kleefeld was selected along with Allen Ginsberg, Timothy Leary and John Lilly to be included in a book of interviews entitled Mavericks of the Mind.

In both her figurative and abstract expressionistic work, Kleefeld uses many media, including oils, acrylics, watercolors, gouaches, iridescents and gold leaf.

Guitar and roses against a backdrop of Impressionist art

JAMES RUSSELL Hunley will set the stage for a romantic evening concert at 7 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 23 at Pacific Grove Middle School.

As a "prelude to romance" Hunley will offer long-stemmed roses to the women in the audience.

The concert will comprise selections from Hunley's latest recording, Lasting Impressions.

During the intermission the audience will be invited to view Impressionistic paintings and photographs by several contemporary artists. Appearing with Hunley will be tenor Steven Thompson.

A portion of the proceeds from the concert and artwork purchases will be donated to the Youth Education Program of the Rancho San Carlos Foundation.

Tickets are priced at $10 for adults and $5 for students and seniors and will be available at the door.

Review/Music

Symphony opens season with exhilarating concert

By LYN BRONSON

LAST SUNDAY afternoon the Monterey County Symphony kicked off its new season with a exhilarating concert before a near-capacity crowd in Carmel's Sunset Center Theater.

As has been his custom in previous seasons, Music Director Clark Suttle brought the crowd to its feet at the beginning of the concert by leading the orchestra in a spirited performance of The Star Spangled Banner. It is always a thrill to hear our national anthem performed by a full symphony orchestra and this occasion was no exception.

Solos sparkled like jewels

The afternoon began with a deft performance of Rossini's Overture to L'Italiana in Algeri (the Italian Girl in Algiers). The strings sounded silky smooth and the woodwind solos sparkled like jewels. Under Suttle's precise and spirited direction the music flowed forth so effortlessly that the spontaneity and charm of this performance were irresistible.

But the best was yet to come in a really solid performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony. Although this symphony is the least often heard of the Beethoven Symphonies, under Suttle's baton the lovely and mysterious opening measures of the first movement proclaimed instantly that we were about to hear a winning performance. The Allegro vivace that followed fulfilled our expectations, and the movement unfolded in a logical and inevitable way.

Unerring precision

The Adagio second movement demonstrated how much the orchestra's refined control of dynamics could contribute to an elegant and poignant performance. The Allegro vivace third movement is a scherzo, which is normally lighthearted—but in this symphony it exhibits a hint of darkness and poignant sadness. This mood was captured superbly.

But the best was the finale. The strings sounded magnificent in this wildly energetic movement as they navigated their way with unerring precision through the most difficult passages. This is not to overlook the splendid showing of the woodwinds in their excellent contribution to the effect of this movement. This was a truly rousing performance of this spectacular perpetual motion movement.

ALEX SLOBODYANIK, pianist, played with his father at the opening of the Monterey County Symphony on Oct. 17.

If there was any disappointment in the afternoon's program it was in the Mendelssohn Concerto for Two Pianos in A-flat Major featuring the father and son team of Alexander and Alex Slobodyanik. This concerto is so rarely heard in live performance that we always welcome an opportunity to hear it in concert. However, since the Slobodyaniks are each distinguished soloists in their own right, we would expect a more polished performance than we heard on Sunday afternoon.

Ragged ensemble

Neither artist seemed fully in control of the score and this contributed to a performance with ragged ensemble and a tug of war regarding tempo in many passages. Although there were moments of beauty, especially in the slow movement, the Concerto as a whole never achieved fleetness of tempo and the sparklingly exact rhythmic beat that we would expect in this dazzling work.

However, the audience reacted warmly with a standing ovation and was rewarded with an encore of the finale to the Prokofiev Seventh Piano Sonata arranged for two pianos.

A special mention should be made of Dr. Louise Cuyler's excellent program notes in the Monterey County Symphony's printed program. These notes are beautifully and professionally written, which is no mean feat since she is writing for readers of varying ages and musical sophistication. These notes seem to me to be the best I have read in any concert program.

Blessing's Cobb at MPC: 'Eccentric, strangely riveting'

By JAMES P. KINNEY

LIKE THE Concours d'Elegance or the Artichoke Festival, Lee Blessing's eccentric yet strangely riveting play about a baseball legend which opened this past weekend on Monterey Peninsula College's Main Stage is not for everyone.

Tyrus Raymond Cobb was without doubt the most ferocious competitor ever to wear baseball spikes professionally. In a career spanning 24 major league seasons, Cobb got more hits, stole more bases and batted for higher average than any other player. "I applied the science of war to baseball," boasted the man known to baseball history as "The Georgia Peach."

Playwright Blessing, utilizing a clever strategem, engages three separate performers as Cobb seen at different stages in his life, throws them somewhat uncomfortably onstage together and sets them bickering and fighting over what was fact and what fiction, what was reality and what myth, in an action-packed and colorful yet ultimately unhappy life.

"I was too real for myth," reflects Morgan Stock as the older Cobb, who is stung by comparisons to his much-beloved contemporary, New York Yankee great Babe Ruth and struggles to downplay the periodic suspensions and physical brawls with other players, umpires and fans which marred his stormy career.

Patrick McEvoy, the middle-aged Cobb, boasts about his financial successes after the end of his playing days. "I was the first millionaire baseball player," he says proudly. But he is also candid about his disappointment in his children. "My eldest son is a gynecologist!" he complains.

David Vega as the young Cobb glories in his off-field brawls and on-field exploits with equal relish. He gleefully tells of the fear he created in other players, especially opposing pitchers, each time he got on base.

Blessing's introduction of a fourth character, Oscar Charleston (Carlton Turner), a contemporary of Cobb's known as "The Black Cobb," affords the audience special insights and adds a dimension of objectivity to what could quickly have become a boring, three-sided, solipsistic conversation.

Charleston, unable to play in the major leagues because of that era's color barrier, wonders why Cobb wasn't remembered as "The White Charleston," an observation not calculated to please any of the Cobbs.

Cobb
written by Lee Blessing will play through Oct. 30
8 p.m. Fridays, Saturdays
2 p.m. Sundays at MPC
Tickets at 655-3200

The depth of dignity brought to the Charleston part by actor Carlton Turner was, I believe, intended by the playwright to contrast with the remarkable lack of it in Cobb, who for all his intelligence, ferocity, and shrewdness, finished an unfulfilled, lonely man.

Taste Buds

The Covey: Perfection personified

THERE IS only one word to describe dining at The Covey Restaurant in Carmel Valley —.perfection.

The moment you arrive at The Covey, which is part of The Quail Lodge on Valley Greens Drive, you know the evening is one you won't forget.

Given that Quail Lodge has received the Mobil 5 -Star Award consecutively since 1975, it isn't difficult to imagine the care and expertise that goes into every detail at The Covey.

The interior of the restaurant is elegantly understated with rich earth tones. Every table in the intimately arranged dining room looks out onto a beautiful water fountain with the wonderful Carmel Valley landscape just beyond.

To begin your dining experience, try the burgundy escargots baked in garlic and shallot butter. The presentation is exquisite. For the less adventurous, the Castroville artichoke with hollandaise sauce and garden herbs is simply delightful.

A glass of Robert Talbott house chardonnay goes well with both of these choices.

For the second course, the shellfish bisque is excellent. Of course, the steamed mussels with lemon grass and curry spices is also a wonderful choice.

Caesar salad for two is a Covey tradition. However, The Covey spinach salad with tender young spinach, crisp bacon and sweet mustard dressing is incredible.

There are a variety of seafood, poultry and meat entrees to choose from including several daily specials. The golden grilled prawns are prepared with a rich glazed sauce of scallions and sesame oil. The red-cooked boned duckling is served with an aromatic fresh fruit sauce and the Chateaubriand for two — which is difficult to find anywhere else — is roast beef tenderloin presented with a selection of seasonal vegetables.

Vegetarians will be pleased to know that their special needs will be accommodated, especially if you call in advance.

THE COVEY

The desserts at The Covey are superb. There's the Vacherin Au Chocolate — ice cream, meringue and roasted almonds topped with chocolate sauce and whipped cream or the raspberries chambord.

But, the cream de la cream, are the grand marnier crepes. The delicate crepes for two are prepared at the table with grand marnier set afire to flame and served with fresh orange slices and strawberries.

There is nothing quite like The Covey Restaurant in Carmel Valley. It is truly a beautiful place to dine and always offers a evening of perfection.

For reservations, call 624-1581.

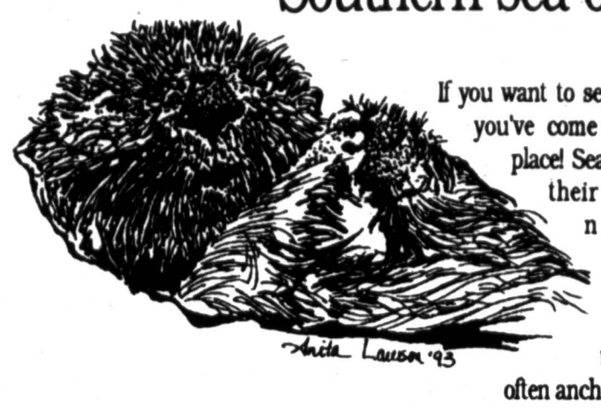
Welcome to the home of the Southern sea otter!

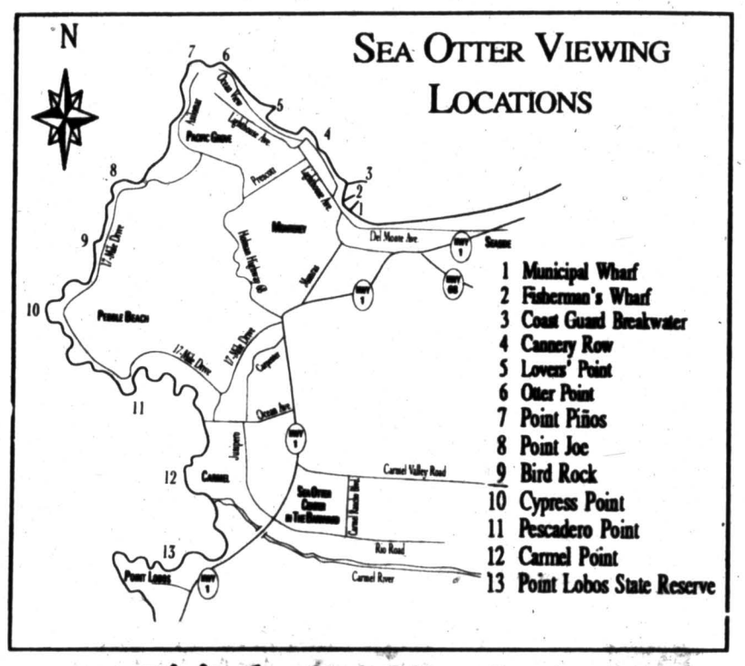


If you want to see a sea otter, you've come to the right place! Sea otters spend their lives in nearshore coastal waters where they sleep at the surface, often anchored in a drift of kelp. Groups of otters are called "rafts" because from a distance they look like small logs floating on the sea.

During the fur trade of the 18th and 19th Centuries, sea otters were hunted to near extinction — but, a tiny band survived off the Big Sur coast. Today, otters can be found off San Luis Obispo, Monterey, and Santa Cruz Counties. Yet, they still number only about 2,000. As a threatened species, the Southern sea otter is protected by state and federal law.

Unlike seals and whales which have layers of blubber to keep them warm in cold ocean waters, sea otters rely on their thick fur coats — which they spend many hours grooming every day. An oil spill represents the greatest single threat to sea otters' existence; oil easily fouls their fur, causing them to die from exposure.

One of the few members of the animal kingdom to use a tool, a sea otter will place a rock on its chest as an anvil upon which to break open its prey. Mothers can often be seen sculling along on their backs with a small furry pup aboard.



Visit the Sea Otter Center

You'll find a vast array of sea otter gifts and souvenirs, free information on sea otters, and a staff of volunteers ready and willing to answer your questions.

If you'd like to take a peek, call 373-2740 for details.

Friends of the Sea Otter

Friends of the Sea Otter (FSO) is a not-for-profit organization founded in 1968 dedicated to aiding in the protection of a rare and threatened species, the Southern sea otter. Our mission is to work to protect the sea otter and its habitat from any and all threats — including but not limited to oil spills, toxic pollution, adverse fishing activities, attacks by mankind, and other present or future threats. We rely on our membership dues, contributions, and proceeds from our Otter Center to continue our work.

We're working to protect the sea otter and its habitat from all threats. During 1993-1994 we will continue to work for:

- A comprehensive oil spill response program
- A strong Endangered Species Act
- A strong Marine Mammal Protection Act
- An effective Southern Sea Otter Recovery Plan
- A fully funded and enforced Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary
- An informed and active public

Jazz Tides

By JOHN DETRO

New venue makes immediate commitment to jazz music

THAT BRIGHT new place in downtown Pacific Grove — Juice 'n' Java at 599 Lighthouse — already has committed itself to some jazz.

The pledge comes naturally. Co-owner Frank Morris III oversees sessions at his Carmel Valley recording studio called Tree Top Productions. And colleague Marlana Nutt says with an honest smile: "I'm glad we've been able to get such good groups so quickly."

Appearing from 8 until 10 p.m. Saturdays is the quintet fronted by trumpet man and flugelhornist Dick Robins, Carmel High's music director. Personnel: Frank Barrett (piano), JoJo Franklin (bass), Mike Shannon (drums), Larry Lawrence (guitar).

While at Carmel High, Mike won a slot with the Monterey Jazz Festival Student All-Stars. It's fun when we have these young players maturing as jazz artists right before our eyes.

On Wednesday nights, you can catch guitarist Joseph Lucido and various friends. Lucido's witty ways have won countless fans for his units.

"These both are open-ended runs," says Frank. "No cover charge on either evening."

The non-alcohol venue welcomes all ages. Served there — juices, coffees, health food.

Not incidentally, Robins says his music department's second annual fundraiser at Sunset Center has been booked well in advance — jazz vocalist Kitty Margolis with classic tenorman Red Holloway. This gig will happen March 2 of next year.

Nick at night

Veteran jazzman Nick Williams will host another of those popular jam sessions on Thursday evening, Oct. 21, at the Vista Lobos Park building. That's on Third between Junipero and Torres in Carmel.

Nick encourages an atmosphere suitable for "whole families." Some of the area's best musicians show up regularly.

It's the usual start time — 7 p.m. Refreshments. Modest donation. Carmel Recreation Department sponsors along with Shop in the Garden.

Another sort of service comes from Don Balistrieri, early morning weekday host over at KRML Jazz Radio (1410AM). Don has excellent taste and has agreed to recommend newish CDs for your private library.

His first pick: Haunted Heart by master bassist Charlie Haden's Quartet West. It's on the Gitanes label (Verve subsidiary). The group features reedman Ernie Watts, Alan Broadbent at the piano, drummer Larance Marable.

North

The 11th Annual San Francisco Jazz Festival will open Oct. 29 and run through Nov. 14. Many different sites. I'm mentioning it now so you have time to get your own copy of the packed schedule.

Call (415) 788-7353 right away. Because any columnist's selection of Highlights will be subjective:

• Friday night opening at Herbst Theater — Joshua Redman Quartet with Pat Metheny, Christian McBride, Billy Higgins. Saxist Joshua hails from Berkeley. McBride must be called a flat-out genius on bass.

• Saturday, Oct. 30, at Herbst — Tribute to Louis Armstrong with Sweets Edison, Terence Blanchard, Maria Muldaur, Barrett Deems, others.

• Sunday, Oct. 31 at Herbst — Jazz Halloween with Carla Bley/Steve Swallow Duo. David Murray Quartet with Amina Claudine Myers.

• Monday, Nov. 1, in Club 36 atop the Grand Hyatt — Larry Vuckovich International Quartet with Carmel Valley's Helcio Milito (historic Brazilian percussionist).

• Thursday, Nov. 4, at Davies Symphony Hall — Great tenorman Joe Henderson's quartet with John Scofield. Big band. Kronos Quartet.

• Friday and Saturday, Nov. 5-6, at Bimbo's 365 Club — Homage to the late Mambo King Mario Bauza. His Afro-Cuban Orchestra fronted by Chico O'Farrill.

• Saturday, Nov. 6, at Kabuki Cinema — Ralph Gleason Film Festival. Footage from the late jazz critic's documentaries and wondrous TV series. Ellington, Armstrong, Dizzy, Coltrane, Sonny Rollins, Julian Adderley, Jimmy Rushing, Jimmy Witherspoon with Ben Webster, on and on.

• Sunday afternoon, Nov. 7, at Oakland's Paramount Theater — Gospel program includes Mighty Clouds of Joy and this area's own Greater Victory Temple Choir.

• Tuesday, Nov. 9, in Union Square. Freebie. Oakland Youth Choir with special guest Ed Kelly at the piano.

• Friday, Nov. 12, in Davies Hall — Ellington program with Cleo Laine and John Dankworth's group. Larry Dunlap Orchestra too. (Larry's a superb pianist, composer and arranger.)

• Saturday, Nov. 13, at Davies Hall — Fats Waller Tribute with Ruth Brown, Dick Hyman, Jay McShann, Doc Cheatham, Ralph Sutton, others.

• Sunday, Nov. 14, in St. Mary's Cathedral — Steve Turre's Sanctified Shells (these conch-blowers were a big hit recently at Monterey Bay Aquarium). Solo performance by Charles Lloyd.

Ducats via Ticketmaster, Wherehouse, Tower Records.

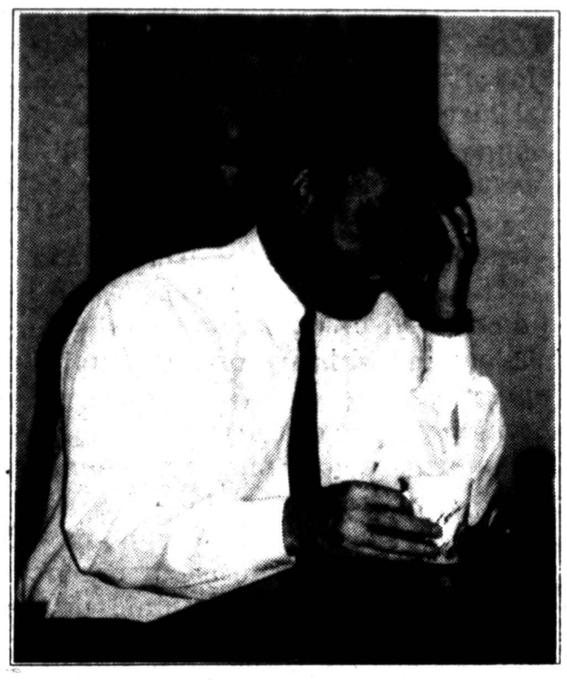
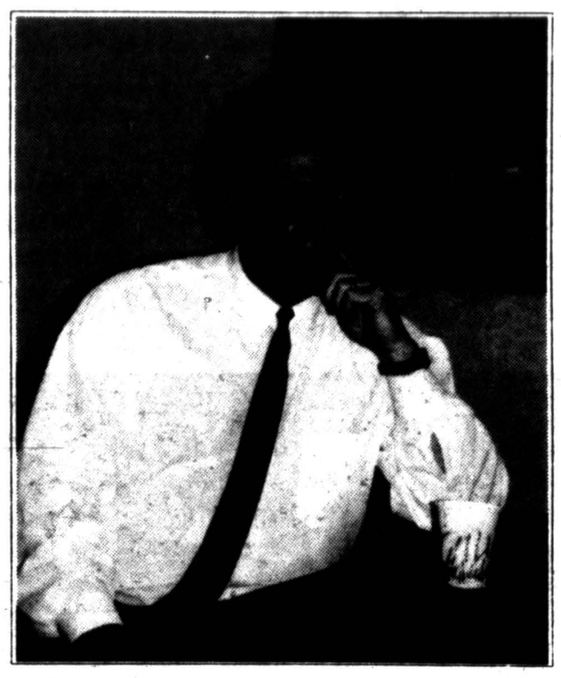
THE PINE CONE'S Q & A

Donoghue reflects on past, future of Performance Carmel

AS DIRECTOR of Sunset Center in Carmel, Brian Donoghue launched the contemporary Performance Carmel series two years ago. During an interview with The Carmel Pine Cone, he discussed the history, goals and mission of the series, which opens its new season on Oct. 23 with a one-man show by Christopher Plummer (see related story on page 31).





'WHEN I look at what has been done to the arts over the last 12 years on a national level, and I see kids killing each other in school, I can make the parallel.'

'TO ME [art] is a secular religion. Somehow it should broaden our knowledge of one another so that we might stop obliterating each other.'

Pine Cone: How has Performance Carmel evolved over the past three years?

Donoghue: It's more settled in. The first time we front-loaded with some names, Philip Glass for example, so people would recognize a contemporary mode. The next year was more refinement. Except for our big opener, Christopher Plummer, people may not know all the performers this year.

Pine Cone: What else do you have planned for this season of Performance Carmel?

Donoghue: We are continuing this year with an eclectic basket of goodies — music, dance and a lot of physical theater. For example, we have Dynamo Theater coming in from Montreal. They put up this huge, monolithic mountain on stage with a trap door that spins around. Thematically the show is about adolescence and how that period in one's life is just fearless, everything can be done.

Pine Cone: What's the defining mission of Performance Carmel?

Donoghue: It's about taking traditional things and twisting them around and offering them in a different way. The Seattle Mime Troupe is that kind of thing. When you hear "mime," immediately you think of all the bad jokes about killing mimes, you think of whiteface. This troupe twists and bends and maybe even perverts that notion of mime.

Pine Cone: What's the financial outlook for the series?

Donoghue: Well, you're asking me a question that's probably asked of everybody, and I'm not sure that anybody from Greenspan to Clinton to Mayor Ken White really has the answer. It's especially hard on the arts. It's unfortunate, but art is generally visualized as the most expendable commodity, and it's not an inexpensive commodity, so there's a double edge there.

But one of the nice things that has happened in the past two or three years is that the business community has a come a lot closer to the efforts of Sunset Center and we've identified those areas that we have in common.

Pine Cone: What are your long-term goals for the series?

Donoghue: Someday to get into commission work. Putting together consortiums with some of the major presenters in the country, so everybody coughs up a little piece of the action. These things take years to put together because you're going after NEA money, regional grants, national grants and then you put together a touring program. That's exciting because you have something to do with the product.

In a few years we'll probably have one of the best houses in California and arguably one of the best houses in the country, certainly acoustically. There won't be anything we can't do here. If it all works out, the five-year plan is that our audiences will be subscribing, we'll have ourselves a place nationally as a respected presenting organization and we'll have a venue that can do residency programs in which the artists stay around for a week or two.

Pine Cone: What could Performance Carmel be doing better?

Donoghue: Outreach. I would really like to have a bigger impact in the school district. That should be happening, and the only reason it hasn't is lack of staff.

It's really hard to motivate teachers to require a performance for class. There's a couple in Seaside who pick up a group of kids in their van and drive them to the show. When the show's over, they drive them home. To identify people like that in the community is rewarding, and it works.

Pine Cone: What is the greatest frustration of your position?

Donoghue: Constantly having to explain and justify the arts. When I look at what has been done to the arts over the last 12 years on a national level, and I see kids killing each other in school, I can make the parallel.

I cannot see why each year when you go over budgets here or elsewhere, you constantly have to re-educate people. It's really hard not to get angry.

Pine Cone: What is the role of the arts in society?

Donoghue: I think it's the better part of us. To me it's a secular religion.

Music/Review

Portland Quartet opens Chamber season with polish

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

THE CHAMBER Music Society of the Monterey Peninsula opened its 26th season on Oct. 8 with a performance by the Portland String Quartet celebrating their own 25th anniversary. They are the second oldest quartet in the business who still have all of the original members.

In the course of the evening's music-making, this fact was demonstrated in the very special cohesion and sensitivity to each other of violinists Stephen Kecskemethy and Ronald Lantz, violist Julia Adams and cellist Paul Ross. Their ensemble was perfectly polished, and a well-seasoned professionalism easily carried them through a demanding program.

They began the evening with the third of Mozart's so-called "Haydn" quartets. These six works, composed over a period of two years, are dedicated to Haydn. In this particular quartet, one can recognize the influence of Haydn on Mozart's compositional method.

Spacious, thoughtful atmosphere

The Portland musicians gave a skillful and well-bred character to the music, playing with fine tone and stylistic understanding. In the Andante they brought out the distinctly uncharacteristic and unexpected chromatic elements incorporated into the tonal fabric. A spacious, thoughtful atmosphere was created with gently insistent urgency. The Minuet was neatly rhythmic with its stamping and droning chords. The Trio was smoothly graceful and there was unusual shape and depth to the movement. The Finale was played with lightness.

Violist Julia Adams announced that Walter Piston was their mission, "just as Carmel has a Mission." The composer, who was born in Maine, was a friend of theirs and composed a concerto for the group.

Strength and vigor

Piston's Quartet No. 1 (1933) is an accessible work and offers much of interest at first hearing. Here one felt a strong sense of the players' involvement with the music. There was strength and vigor in their attacks and great assurance in the interpretation. The instrumental tone was full, alive and powerful.

The Andante was a sensitive, lovely movement with a fine cello line very well expounded by Paul Ross. The atmospheric content was carefully shaped and the dynamic colorings were excellent. The technically demanding Allegro finale with its intricate rhythmic figures rounded out a very interesting and well-received composition.

High point of program

The beautiful Schubert "Quartet in D Minor" (Death and the Maiden) was the high point of the program for me. One of the most musically as well as technically challenging works in the literature, it brought out all the best this group has to offer. They painted on a grand scale, performing with the passionate finesse and the unity of purpose developed through years of practice. Their cohesion highlighted the beauties of the music and carried this listener along very willingly.

The clarity of tone and the instrumental balance through the flights of virtuoso passage work was noteworthy, even when Schubert's "heavenly length" seemed to become a burden to the first violinist. Still, the prestissimo coda brought it all to a triumphant close.

Touching base with the Baroque for an encore, the quartet played the eleventh fugue from J. S. Bach's "Art of the Fugue."

He has performed A Word or Two as a benefit for world literacy.

'Impersonating the words'

Plummer first became interested in acting as a way of "impersonating the words" that he read and "giving them another life." He admits to having been a shy child who felt emboldened "to show off in front of other people if I had material or a character that wasn't my own. I could hide behind that, disguise myself and fulfill myself through someone else's life."

Looking back on half a lifetime of extraordinary performances, Plummer says modestly, "Sometimes I'm amazed I've done what I've done."

He harbors no complaints about his chosen career. "I don't go through life regretting or saying, 'Why aren't I the hottest actor this week?' It's such a cruel, ghastly, awful, gypsy-ridden existence that it's never dull."

Plummer is looking forward to his first visit to Carmel. "A lot of my friends adore it. The theater sounds enchanting. I've been doing this show in huge barns of places. The size [of Sunset Center] is perfect."

Beyond the immediate future of this weekend, Plummer is working with Jason Robards on a Broadway revival of Harold Pinter's play, No-Man's Land. He is also writing "a sort of book, going through torture and fun." Naturally, he doesn't want to give the plot away. But it will be "a sort of novel with me in it. The last thing I want to write is an autobiography. I have to lie a lot to make the book more interesting."

Plummer is so good at what he does that even this last assertion is almost credible. But not quite.

Donoghue reflects on role of art in society

Somehow it should broaden our knowledge of one another so that we might stop obliterating each other.

The reason people destroy each other is that they don't see the value of human life. The arts bring back that sense of value. It's the piece that I think used to be taken care of by extreme, repressive religions, the fear of going to hell and all that. But that doesn't work in our technological age.

Not that people do not have faith, because they do. But the majority of people in this country are not tied into that and could be tied into the arts. We've had a devastating cultural awakening. It's hard for people to keep up with it. And the arts can change that.

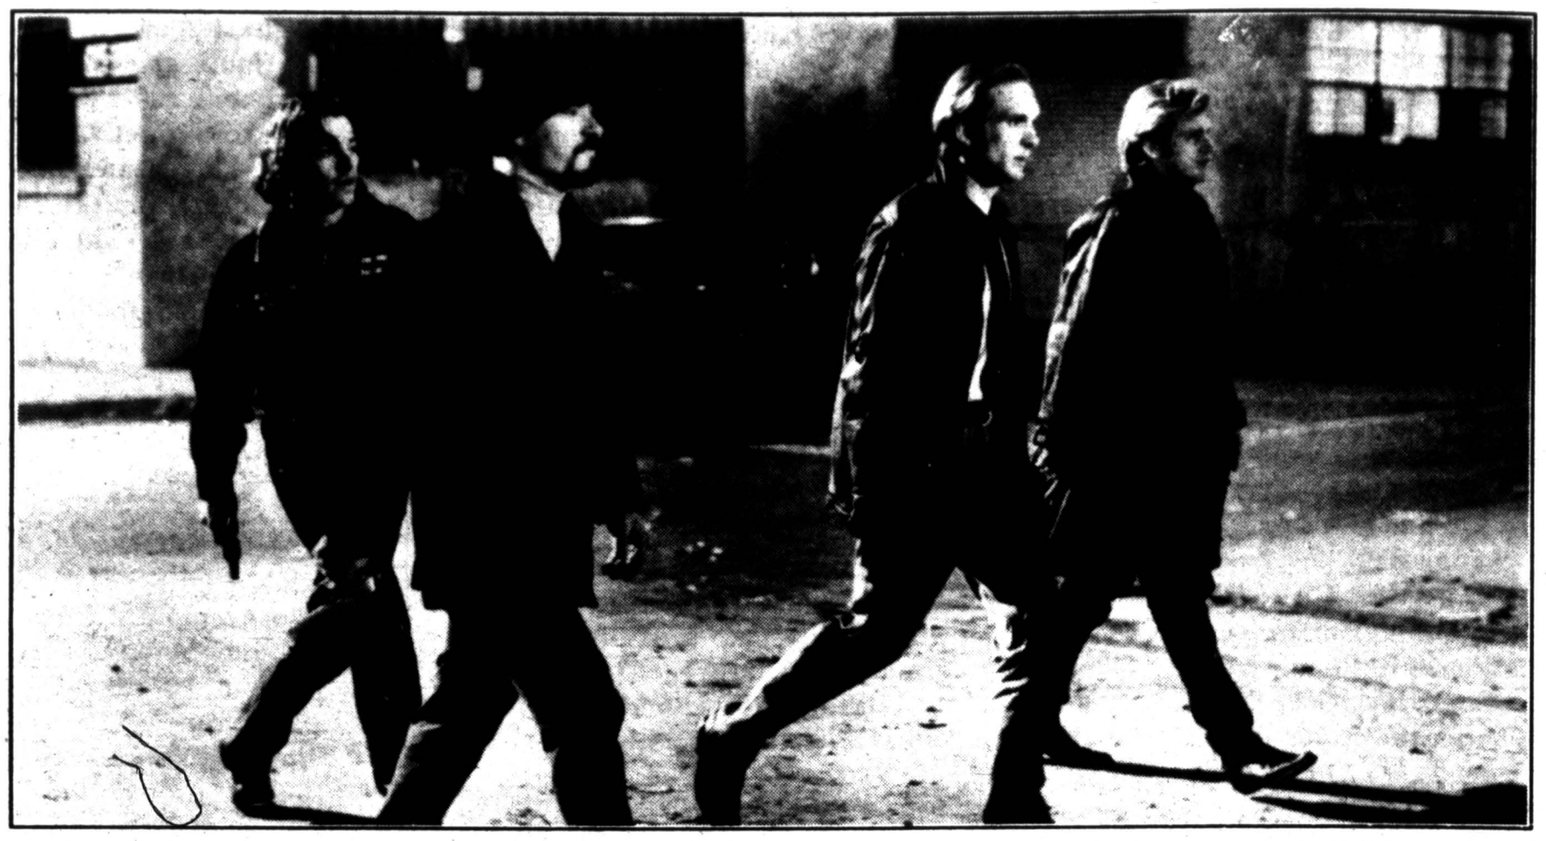
Review/Film

'Judgment Night' is another cliché-ridden male-bonding flick

By CRAIG ARNOTT



ROVING BANDS of impeccably coiffed thugs populate Judgment Night, an exercise in trite cinema.

JUDGMENT NIGHT
Lighthouse Cinemas, Pacific Grove
Starring: Emilio Estevez, Cuba Gooding, Jr., Jeremy Piven, Stephen Dorff, Denis Leary
Director: Stephen Hopkins
Rating: ★

MIDWAY THROUGH Judgment Night, our four friends, unarmed and pursued by tough but impeccably coiffed gangsters, find themselves trapped in a sewer. It is a critical moment.

"Hey!" shouts one of them, grabbing a metal pipe lying near his feet. "We can beat these guys!"

That's the turning point that's supposed to have the audience on its feet, or at least tapping its toes with anticipation. And it could be were there some intelligence in the screenplay or direction.

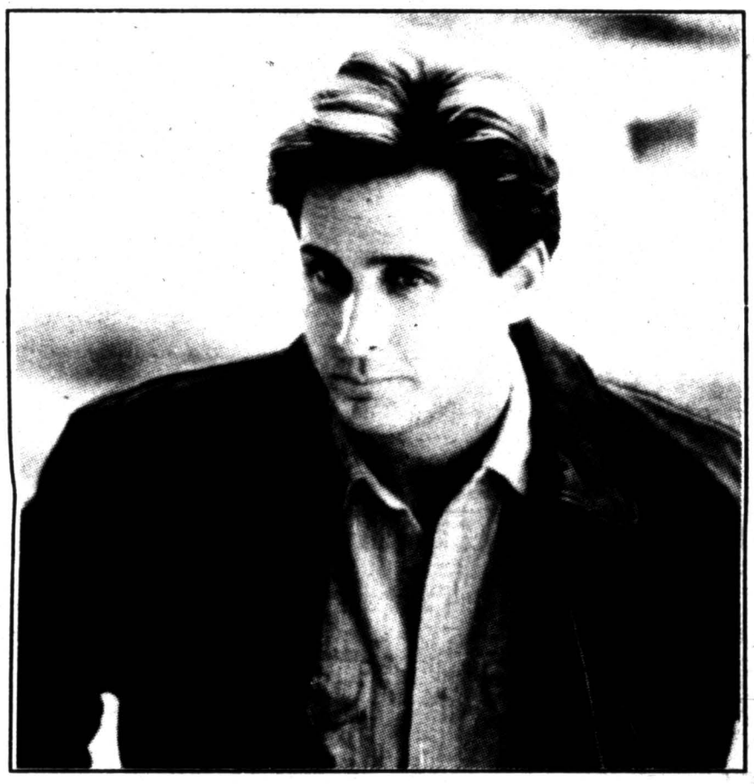
As it stands, Judgment Night is a typical action film filled with grubby violence and big, empty gestures of camaraderie. Maybe it's something to see if you're young, male and in between football practice and the video arcade.

Scraping bottom

Continuing with his knack for choosing mediocre roles, Emilio Estevez plays the generally sensible Frank, who sets out to see a boxing match with his brother and a couple of old cronies and ends up taking quite a ride.

Mike (Cuba Gooding, Jr.) is the bitter ex-athlete, Ray (Jeremy Piven) the selfish opportunist, and John (Stephen Dorff) the hotheaded younger brother. Quiz: which one will be killed off before the film is over?

Trying to avoid a traffic snarl on the expressway, the foursome decides to cut through Chicago's spooky underside. A messy accident leaves them stranded and at the mercy of a vengeful gang led by Fallon (Denis Leary), a fast-talking, colorful psychopath.



ESTEVEZ: HE shows off penchant for mediocre roles.

From then on the boys must use their strength and cunning to escape. They crawl across a rickety ladder bridging two rooftops. They hide in a department store. They scale many a fence.

And, in certain key scenes, they bond. It might be a pat on the back or a quick hug after a narrow escape, but it lets the viewers know that these four care.

There have been so many films like this one that watching Judgment Night is like having a recurring dream that always lasts too long and isn't that interesting to begin with.

The performances consist more of reacting than acting, the direction is slick yet hollow — e.g., many artful shots of blowing leaves and shattering windows. And the writing is dull and probably not even necessary.

As Fallon, real-life comedian Leary seems like he's doing his schtick rather than playing a menacing thug. With his rapid delivery and sarcastic air, it's a wonder he hadn't been plugged long before the story got underway.

Saving grace

Estevez has a few glimmers of genuine emotion, but the screenplay doesn't allow him or the others to develop much personality.

The most original aspect of this film is the soundtrack, which was a rare collaboration between different rap and rock groups. The result is a cool urban hybrid — one that really should be experimented with further in future films. It's a shame that the single engaging aspect of this film was actually underused.

Judgment Night falls well short. Finally, it's a big dumb beast of a movie that feeds on blood and testosterone. Best to leave it alone and let it starve.

Snow was born in Brazil in 1966. She grew up in Germany and on the Monterey Peninsula.

After graduating from high school in Munich she attended college in Marin County.

She received her Bachelor's degree in Creative Writing from Linfield College and now lives on Puget Sound in Washington State.

Snow has been published in Writing for Our Lives, The Pointed Circle, The Archer and Rain City Review.

Her poems have won awards and have been read on the Ars Poetica series on KAZU.

Snow has previously read at Portofino Cafe and the Private Collections Gallery in Pacific Grove.

According to her artist's statement, Snow considers poetry "a kind of implosion . . . in which all of life's most intense and deeply felt moments come together in a compression of thought."

She compares poetry to "looking through a microscope" at the world.

The Ludwa Studio is located in the Jack London crosswalk between Fifth and Sixth streets.

REAL ESTATE Viewpoint

by John Saar, Broker

How to use a realtor's expertise

If you are using the services of a professional Realtor to find a new home, great communication is crucial. If the agent knows your criteria, in depth, he or she can work much more effectivcly with you, showing you only those homes that meet your needs.

If you are looking in a specific area, explain why. Is it proximity to your job, good schools, or just overall appeal? If there are no houses available in your price range the agent may suggest alternate neighborhoods with the same amenities. Do you need a home office or do you have hobbies that you want to accommodate? Are there particular styles you prefer over others? Is a fireplace or large kitchen especially important to you? When we work with buyers, sometimes we have to be a little psychic. The more you can tell us about what you have to have and what you're willing to compromise on, the easier it will be to find something that's as perfect as possible.

Catalina's Carmel connection gunning down opponents; MTAL title in sight focused.

"We can't let up. We've got to pace ourselves so that we peak again on the 10th of November."

That peak began to look attainable to Blair this summer.

First came confirmation of Maclennan's return after a year's absence from the squad when she concentrated on national junior competitions. Then, incoming freshman Ferlito won the Pacific Coast Junior Championships over the summer. Next came Walgenbach, who, like Ferlito, is a top-ranked junior coached by Bobby Montgomery at Carmel Valley Ranch Resort.

Suddenly, Blair had on her team three of the top-ranked players in Northern California, each with years of court time.

Perhaps her biggest surprise was that the scrappy Benner improved enough over last year to claim the No. 4 singles position. It was then when Blair suspected she might be on to something special.

Blair has at been at the Santa Catalina helm for 14 years. She has coached the team to 12-2 records each of the last two years, continuing the school's fine tennis tradition.

During that time, however, she also saw the base of tennis power shift to Stevenson, which won 62 MTAL matches without a loss over that same period.

Before the two teams' first match this season, though, Blair had an inkling another shift was about to occur.

Sure enough, Catalina ended the Stevenson streak in a match on the Cougars' home court, then traveled to Pebble Beach last week where they whipped RLS again.

"You never really know until you see them play under pressure," Blair said.

Another pressure test will be applied in the ensuing weeks when the Catalina girls take the next step forward in their quest for a perfect season.

Inside Golf

By JANET COLES

Buying equipment that is tailored to your game

ALTHOUGH LOW scores cannot be "bought," the better your technique becomes, the more you will benefit from "tailoring" your equipment and selection of golf ball to your skill levels and swing characteristics.

My suggestion is to put playability first, cosmetic or brand appeal second. Most important, ask a Ladies Professional Golf Association or Professional Golf Association player to assist you in your decisions and follow these guidelines:

- Build your golf set to strengthen your weaknesses. For example, favor fairway-woods rather than long-irons if you struggle with lofting your long shots.
- Be conservative and spend modestly until your strengths and weaknesses become definable in order to tailor complementary equipment. For instance, the perfect Christmas gift for the new golfer would be a set of clubs including a 3-wood; 3-, 5-, 7-, and 9-irons, sand wedge and putter.
- As your skill and commitment to golf increase, be sure your shaft lengths are proper for your height. Most standard sets for men and women fit the majority.
- Be sure you have the correct shaft flexibility, which is a proper balance between club-head speed and club-face control.
- Check your grip size. When you grip the club, your fingertips should barely meet the palm.
- Be sure your clubs lie property on the ground. The sole of each club should sit slightly toe-up.
- Select your putter by performance and feel, not appearance or style.

Have fun picking the equipment that fits you best, and remember to take the time to demonstrate different clubs with a professional assistant.

(Janet Coles is a member of the Ladies Professional Golf Association and toured 14 seasons, winning four tour events. She retired as a top 30 all-time leading money winner. Coles has just returned from her teaching position at the Atlantic Golf Club in Southhampton, N.Y. She teaches golf at Rancho Cañada Golf Club in Carmel Valley and can be reached at 624-0111.)

AUTOMOTIVE CARE & REPAIR

DOWN TO THE SMALLEST 'DETAIL'

Area auto detailers promote protection of investment

By SUSAN BECK

DETAILING YOUR automobile is the best way to protect your investment.

At least Evan Dick thinks so. And he should know. The native of Carmel is a pioneer of the mobile detailing service industry on the Monterey Peninsula.

Dick, owner of Bay Mobile Services, advocates having your vehicle detailed twice a year to ensure the value of your investment.

His interest in cars started as a young man. He took his first car, an Alfo Romero, into a shop for repairs. The mechanic charged Dick $800 to change the transmission fluid.

"I got so mad," said Dick, "I decided to learn how to take care of my own car."

He took several automotive classes, but didn't like the business of being a mechanic. So he decided to sell cars, which he didn't like any better.

Dick's desire to continue working with cars led him to work with a local detailer in Carmel Valley. The detailing service being offered at the time was rudimentary.

"We would go to people's houses with a hose and five-gallon bucket for water," said Dick. "I thought I could elaborate on what was being offered."

EVAN DICK, owner of Bay Mobile Services, pioneered the mobile detailing service industry on the Monterey Peninsula.

Thriving business

Bay Mobile Services was established eight years ago and has escalated over the years into a thriving business. Dick's service truck is equipped with everything to detail a vehicle anywhere.

"I could basically detail a car in the middle of a desert," said Dick.

Today, most of his customers are high-end car owners. His prices range from $100 to $200. But sometimes he has to turn down a prospective client if their car is in terrible condition.

"It's like having a bald person going in for a haircut," said Dick. "There is nothing I can do to make it better."

Detailing a car is the responsible thing to do, he said, adding that he respects people who want to take care of their cars.

"I can't say I offer anything different than other detailers," said Dick. "But I've been doing it longer than anyone else and have more experience. There are no gimmicks. I want my customers to be happy with my work. I'm there to do what they want done."

Occasionally, Bay Mobile Services has to refer a client to another detailer. When that happens, Dick refers his customer to Peter Speciale, who started Doctor Detail in 1991.

"Peter is a great guy," said Dick. "He's polite and professional."

PETER SPECIALE started his mobile detailing business, Doctor Detail, in 1991.

Car fanatic

Speciale has always lived on the Monterey Peninsula. He became a "complete car fanatic" in high school entering car shows and buffing his friend's cars. He inherited his first car, a Datsun 510, from his mother and saved all of the money he earned while busing tables at a Monterey restaurant to get his new car painted.

"I watched over my car like it was a Ferrari," said Speciale. "I would get up before school to wash my car."

But you don't have to own a Ferrari to get special detail attention from Speciale, who said he treats everyone's vehicle the same.

"From an $8 million jet to a $500 Volkswagon, the price is determined by condition," said Speciale, who makes house and office calls six days a week.

The price of detailing ranges from $100 to $150, which includes cleaning everything inside and outside of vehicles down to the smallest piece of lint.

Speciale works out of his 1985 fire-engine red Toyota pickup. Speciale's truck is fully equipped with a 50-gallon water tank, 5,000-watt generator air compressor and a wet-dry vacuum cleaner. All of the products utilized are non-toxic and biodegradable, Speciale noted.

A detail takes between two and five hours while a regular car wash, including cleaning the interior, takes about one hour, said Speciale.

"People have busy careers," he observed. "Not everyone has time to wait three or four hours to have their car detailed."

His clients range from the exotic automobile owner to adults, who just don't have the time to clean their cars.

Speciale recommends detailing vehicles once in the summer and again in the winter.

"When you detail your car," he added, "you ensure getting the highest return on your investment."

Our nation's cars — they're older, better and worth more

OUR NATION'S drivers, now older than ever, are driving older cars, too. Average car age in 1970 was 4.9 years. Now, a generation later, that figure has increased by nearly two-thirds to eight years. That's the oldest since the end of World War II when average car age reached nine years.

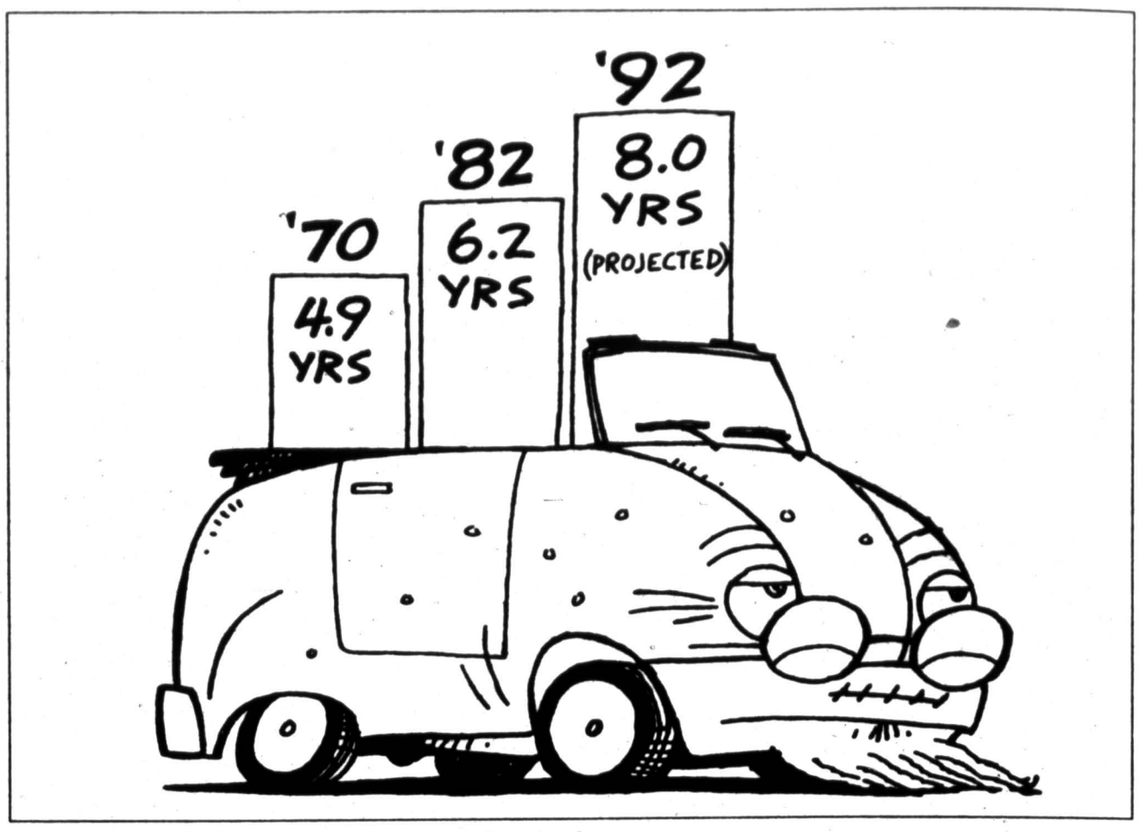
A car is not necessarily a clunker because it is old, emphasizes the Ohio-based Car Care Council, but it is more likely to be a candidate for repairs, and it certainly deserves more frequent under-the-hood checks.

Survey results from National Car Care Month vehicle checks indicate a continuing condition of maintenance neglect on vehicles of all ages. This is due in part to the fact that 80 percent of all gas is pumped at the self-service pumps, where people neglect underhood checks. But it's also due to tight money: needed preventive maintenance sometimes takes a back seat to other household items.

Maintenance pays off

The popularity of well maintained used cars is on the rise, as new car dealers now sell more used cars than new. Another benefit of keeping one's vehicle in good condition is trade-in value, concludes the council; good used cars are bringing top dollar.

Average price of a used car has increased more than any other category listed in the government's consumer price index, showing a +9.1 percent change (in a May 1993 report). This compares to a +6.3 percent increase for medical care, generally considered the leader in cost escalation.



Letters to the Editor

Improving the air we breathe

Dear Editor:

The American Lung Association of the Central Coast — The Christmas Seal People — will support car care awareness month by educating businesses and residents on ways to help cut air pollution through car maintenance, statistics on air pollution and-resources available in the community.

During National Car Care Month motorists are encouraged to practice vehicle preventative maintenance. The objectives: to improve air quality, highway safety, fuel conservation, and owner operating costs.

The priority of the American Lung Association is to improve the air we breath, while improving automobile engine life and fuel mileage. We hope to accomplish this through media resources and printed informational flyers. News coverage offers the Lung Association an opportunity to further our education efforts, which is greatly appreciated.

Please call me (373-7306) with questions you have or ideas you would like to discuss. Again, thank you for your interest and consideration of support for National Car Care Month.

'Writing is on the wall,' says tire safety group

MOTORISTS SHOULD read the writing on the wall — the tire sidewall, according to the Tire Industry Safety Council.

"Many motorists don't know that their tires' sidewalls contain load and inflation pressures, and other important safety and performance information," Thomas E. Cole, council chairman, said.

To help you maintain and extend the life of your tires, the Tire Industry Safety Council offers a Tire Safety & Mileage Kit for $4, which contains an air pressure gauge, tread depth gauge, four valve caps and a copy of the Consumer Tire Guide.

The kit may be ordered by sending a check or money order to: Tire Industry Safety Council, P.O. Box 3147, Medina, OH 44258.

Racing school offers advanced driving course designed to save lives

By SCOTT BREARTON

FOR MANY, driving can be a stressful, downright scary chore.

Russell Racing School at Laguna Seca is offering a hands-on course in automobile safety, designed to help motorists overcome the fear factor in the "asphalt jungle" and learn to control their cars in virtually any situation with confidence.

"It gives people a chance to do something they wouldn't do in their own cars," said Ti Morse, Russell driving instructor. "It's very controlled out there. You can go out and just have a good time."

The course, designed in conjunction with the United States Auto Club and other leading safety groups, is tailored to help drivers reduce their odds of becoming a traffic statistic, while making everyday driving more enjoyable.

Consider these facts released by Inneraction Safety, Inc., a San Jose-based consulting group:

• One out of every 100 North Americans in their lifetimes will die in an auto accident.

• One out of six will cause or be the victim of a serious injury accident.

• The average U.S. high school loses a student in a traffic fatality every 36 months.

• Motor vehicle accidents are the leading cause of death for 18 to 25-year-old people.

• Even the most minor at-fault traffic accident can raise an individual's insurance rates several hundred dollars per year.

Despite these sobering facts, many drivers, according to Russell officials, never learn the basics of accident avoidance or car control. High school driver training, they say, is generally minimal and is being reduced in many states due to budgetary constraints.

When an emergency strikes, the average driver has less than a second to learn what to do. For most people, however, learning by trial and error is tragically ineffective.

Russell's Street Survival advanced driving course offers exercises in threshold braking, skid control, chassis balance and weight management, accident avoidance, high-speed handling and basic automotive safety in a controlled environment.

Students are put behind the wheel of a brand new fully-equipped Mitsubishi Diamante. At Russell, each student has his or her own vehicle throughout the entire five-hour course. Drivers also spend a full session in an automatic skid car, which simulates real-life skid emergencies. Eighty percent of the time is spent behind the wheel.

Street Survival is offered year-round at Russell Racing School, located at Laguna Seca Raceway. Anyone with a valid driver's license is eligible, although those under 18 must have parental consent. Advanced registration is required. For additional information, call 372-7223.

RUSSELL RACING School's Case Montgomery, lead instructor for the 'Street Survival' advance driving course, counsels a group of young drivers before they get behind the wheel and practice high-speed handling techniques.

THE TUNEUP: What should be included and why

■ Preventive maintenance or is it a tonic for existing problems in your vehicle?

WHEN YOU take your car into the shop for a "complete tuneup," a service generally required every 30,000 miles or every two or three years, what services should be included?

This question, often controversial even among the automotive service trade, is addressed in a recent newsletter of the Professional Master Technician's Association. The facts are provided by a "CD-ROM" repair information database, used by technicians to access current and accurate diagnostic and repair information.

Electronic ignition, computerized engine controls and electronic fuel injection have eliminated many of the adjustments that once were part of a traditional tuneup. So most technicians probably would say a tuneup on most cars today is a preventive maintenance service or an engine performance check.

One of the main reasons people bring their vehicles into their mechanics for a tuneup is because they are experiencing some kind of "driveability" problem: Starting, stalling, hesitation on acceleration, poor gas mileage or lack of power.

These symptoms seldom are cured with a new set of spark plugs or a few turns of the screwdriver. On today's complex engines, a comprehensive performance check is in order.

Another item that should be included is an emissions check, now mandatory in 35 states. Most mechanics check the operation of basic emissions control components, but an actual emissions check at the tailpipe is essential to accurate diagnosis.

For a pamplet listing the eight most common signs you car needs a tuneup, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-sized envelope to Car Care Council, Dept. T, One Grande Lake Drive, Port Clinton, OH 43452.

Recipe for a proper tuneup

THE FOLLOWING items should be included in a complete tune-up, according to the professionals. The list may vary according to vehicle and/or shop providing the service, but it's a handy reference for owners seeking quality service.

- Replace spark plugs
- Replace distributor rotor
- Check the distributor cap and replace it if necessary
- Check ignition timing and adjust if necessary
- Check ignition performance (firing voltage/ignition patterns)
- Check ignition wires and replace if necessary
- Check ignition idle speed and adjust if necessary
- Check the choke mechanism (on engines with carburetors)
- Clean fuel injectors
- Check compression and/or power balance (to identify bad injectors as well as compression problems
- Check manifold intake vacuum to reveal exhaust restrictions
- Check battery and charging voltage
- Check exhaust emissions, to verify fuel mixture, ignition performance and emission controls performance
- Check the vehicle computer for presence of any trouble codes
- Install a new air filter
- Replace the fuel filter(s)
- Replace the PCV (positive crankcase ventilation) valve
- Check all emissions control components
- Check all vital fluids, including engine oil, transmission fluid, coolant, brake and power steering fluid.
- Check all belts and hoses
- Check safety items such as lights, windshield wipers, tires, horn, etc.

Car maintenance: It's what you don't know that could hurt

IMPLEMENTATION OF the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 will affect all car owners by the end of the decade, the National Automobile Dealers Association said.

The Act mandates that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency issue regulations on its implementation, many of which will affect motor vehicles and the motor vehicle service industry. The regulatory debate will focus on enacting legislation that industry, environmentalists and the general public will support.

All Americans want clean air and a wholesome environment, but that will mean sacrifices and higher costs for industry and consumers, NADA said. Currently, eight out of 10 motorists pump their own gas and do not even bother to check engine oil level regularly. Dirty car engines pollute the air, and many unsafe cars are on the nation's highways as a result of improper maintenance.

Every car owner can contribute significantly to a cleaner environment and

Watchdog bureau on lookout for auto repair fraud

By PAUL WOLF

TOO OFTEN, it is with a watchful eye and nervous demeanor that we approach our local mechanics and repair professionals.

On those occasions when we discover we "may have been taken," we do have options. To start with, we should recognize the role of the Monterey area division of the Bureau of Automotive Repair (BAR).

"We perform investigations on fraudulent shops, and we mainly mediate on consumer complaints," said Don Johnson, supervisor for BAR's Monterey Field office.

Consider it the local consumer "watchdog" whose authority comes directly from the state.

Former Gov. Ronald Reagan signed the state Automobile Repair Act of 1971, which created the bureau, a branch of the California Department of Consumer Affairs. Today, there are some 40 BAR field offices in California.

The local office, according to Johnson, has four full-time field investigators. The bureau gives consumers a formal way to take action against negligent repair shops.

A citizen first obtains and completes a complaint form from the bureau. The bureau, in turn, assigns a case number and a BAR representative.

Then, the representative is charged with mediating on the citizen's behalf. If indeed a violation appears to have occurred, the representative will obtain the relevant documentation and issue a Notice of Violation to the repair shop.

It should be noted, at the risk of sounding obvious, that the BAR representative cannot represent the complaint in court. However, the bureau's success has been proven — negotiating each year better than $4 million in "rework, refunds and adjustments," according to BAR literature.

Although it will not give recommendations on repair establishments, the bureau will provide information on the "complaint history" of a given shop, according to Johnson. For more information, call the toll-free number: 1-800-952-5210.

National group helps take guesswork out of car repairs

FOR COUNTLESS motorists, any thought of car care presents a challenge: how to find competent automotive repair and service.

Maybe years ago, a shadetree mechanic would do; after all, cars were simpler, less complex. But with today's high-tech vehicles, the margin for error is less.

Mistakes can be costly. Whether it's the family sedan, a sports car, mini-van, pick-up truck, or sports utility vehicle, today's cars and light trucks represent a sizeable investment.

An increasingly popular way of finding qualified mechanics — one that avoids much trial and error — is to look for automobile technicians who have earned national credentials from the National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence (ASE), an independent, non-profit organization whose mission is to improve the quality of automotive service and repair through the voluntary testing and certification of automotive technicians.

Here's how the ASE program works. Twice a year thousands of mechanics sit for ASE certification exams at some 500 locations across the country. Designed by representatives from the automotive service and repair industry, vocational educators, and ASE's own technical specialists, the exams stress real world diagnostic and repair problems, not theory.

The exams are no cinch to pass; about one out of three test takers fails. The exams are administered in the field by The American College Testing Program (ACT), the same organization that offers college entrance and other professional exams.

Best used car 'buy' may be the one you now own

IF YOU'VE been muttering about your old car "nickel and diming you to death," you may be fighting the urge to head for the dealer's showroom or used car lot.

Sticker shock, however, can make those nickels and dimes look pretty good, especially when weighing the facts and figures provided by the Ohio-based Car Care Council in their pamphlet "Renew or Replace: Rx for Making a Decision."

Think about investing perhaps no more than the amount of a down payment to fix up your old car, suggests the pamphlet. In a sense, you'd be buying your next car at the right price from someone you (hopefully) can trust: yourself.

When and if you do consider this option, be objective. Visit a mechanic and let him inspect your car. He can compile an itemized list of mechanical needs and the approximate cost to put it back in good shape.

Next, put the pencil to it. If the car is paid for, you'll probably save money by giving it a new lease on life.

Further, by having it repaired you can make your car serviceable for another couple of years while saving toward its replacement. And, when you are ready to deal, you'll have a better car to trade.

While a mechanic may quickly move under the hood to diagnose mechanical problems, most car owners look first to the outside of the car.

They want a nice paint job, no dented fenders or missing trim. Some touch up work or perhaps a new paint job may be needed. Think about pin stripes to dress it up a bit.

Look at the interior. Does the fabric need to be cleaned and/or repaired? Would a sun roof make you happier with "Old Faithful"? A little money can go a long way toward upgrading a car.

To estimate the costs of cosmetic upgrading you'll need the help of a body and paint shop plus an upholstery and trim professional.

So consider your options: a new car that may strain the budget and depreciate quickly, a used car that's an unknown quantity, or the car you already own.

No matter what major work your car needs, it usually won't be as costly as the first two options.

Seaside dealer debuts '94 Rolls with extra flair

A 1994 Rolls-Royce sedan is being introduced to the Central Coast with a flair this week at Infiniti of Monterey, according to Mick Chiero, general manager.

The new 6,000-pound English luxury car is being perched delicately atop Wedgwood china teacups.

"This unique introduction of the new Rolls-Royce will demonstrate convincingly what an extraordinarily well-balanced motor car it is," Chiero said.

The four-day visit at the Seaside-based auto dealer culminates on Thursday, Oct. 21.

SHOCKS & STRUTS

■ A worn ride is a dangerous ride

A COMMON cause of highway accidents is the driver's loss of control of the vehicle. Reasons vary, including driving too fast for conditions, rough road surface, momentary lack of attention at the wheel and many more, but the net result is an accident.

In many cases, a more "forgiving" car can help avoid such a crisis, says the Car Care Council of Port Clinton, Ohio.

The term relates to a car's ability to cling to the road when the driver enters a curve too fast or stay on course when the right wheels run onto the shoulder of the road.

A valuable safety feature of your late model car is its excellent handling characteristics. Good roadability, which can help keep you out of trouble, should remain yours for the life of your car if you practice preventive maintenance, emphasizes the council.

This means regular checks, service and replacement of critical systems like brakes, steering and suspension, including tires.

Shock absorbers and struts, defined as ride control parts, also fit into the category of safety equipment. (A strut has a shock absorber inside a "housing" which connects the suspension to the vehicles body.) If you're riding on worn shocks and struts, your vehicle may be unsafe not only to driver and passengers but also to other vehicles on the road.

Depends on friction

Your car's ability to steer, brake and accelerate depends on the friction between the tires and the road. Instability of a vehicle, like bouncing wheels or swaying on turns, is caused by worn shock absorbers and/or struts.

Worn shocks will also cause a nose dive action when you come to a stop and can increase braking distances up to 10 percent. The symptoms of deteriorating ride control can gradually "sneak up on you" until they become noticeably bad. Such was the case with many owners of several hundred cars and trucks inspected during a National Car Care Month vehicle check.

More information about shock absorbers, struts and ride control is available in the council's new pamphlet, "Your Shocks and Struts Need Inspection." For a free copy, send a business-sized, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Car Care Council, Dept. RC, One Grande Lake Drive, Port Clinton, OH 43452.

Certification benefits consumers

perience requirement earn the title of ASE-certified Automobile Technician, while those who pass all eight auto exams earn Master Auto Technician status. Technicians must recertify every five years in order to keep current with changing technology and to remain in the ASE program.

Certified auto technicians are issued personalized credentials listing their exact areas of certification and blue and white ASE shoulder insignia.

Repair facilities employing ASE-certified technicians usually display the ASE sign on the premises and post their technicians' credentials in the customer service area.

Because ASE offers certification in all major areas of automotive repair and service, it is wise to ask the shop owner or service manager specifically for a technician who is certified in the appropriate area, say, brakes, engine repair, or alr condltlonlng.

ASE-certified auto technicians have proven their competency to their customers, their employers, and themselves and have the blue and white ASE credentials to prove it.

Because certification is voluntary, mechanics who have taken the time and expense to earn their credentials can be counted on to have a strong sense of pride in accomplishment, which should be good news for consumers.

ASE-certified auto technicians can be found at every type of repair facility: new car dealerships, independent garages, service stations, tire dealers, speciality shops, and major franchises.

Adhering to maintenance helps saves money, life, environment

save money by doing two things - performing regular and periodic safety and maintenance checks on the cars you own or drive.

Simple adherence to maintenance schedules outlined in vehicle owner's manuals would contribute to a cleaner environment, save money in costly repair bills and save lives.

Automobile dealers can provide car owners with a maintenance schedule tailored to local driving conditions.

NADA recommends that motorists regularly take their car to a dealership or repair shop and have the brakes, lights, tires, wipers and fluid levels inspected, so that problems can be corrected before they become serious.

The National Car Care Council estimates that 50 percent of all vehicle accidents in the United States are caused by unsafe vehicles that have not received basic maintenance.

October is National Car Care Month, and NADA reminds motorists that this is a perfect time to have your car thoroughly checked over and make sure that proper basic maintenance hasn't been neglected.

As winter approaches, harsh weather and falling leaves become potential road hazards without good tires, a properly adjusted suspension system, good brakes and tight steering. Motorists should be aware of the increased demands of winter driving on vehicle engines. A seasonal tune-up can ensure that your car is up to the challenge.

The message is simple: proper maintenance saves money and contributes to a cleaner environment because clean-running cars help reduce harmful emissions and help prevent highway fatalities.

For a free brochure on proper car maintenance, write to the National Automobile Dealers Association, Public Affairs Department, 8400 Westpark Drive, McLean, VA 22102, or phone (703) 827-7407 to request "At Your Service."

NADA represents more than 19,000 franchised new car and truck dealers.
